Franklin Dodge Declares Remus Cad and Liar

MAN WHO TRAPPED RUM KING ANXIOUS TO FACE JURYMEN

Former Government Agent Says Mrs. Remus Was Always Faithful to "Treacherous Husband."

DEFENDANT'S PAL INDICTED BY JURY

Perjury Is Charged to John S. Berger, Millionaire; Witness Threatens To Sue Taft.

BY MARTIN SOMMERS.
(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Cincinnati, Ohio, December 10.—Dropping the mask of unconcern he has worn since he first was mentioned as the arch-fiend of the Remus murder and liquor and love triangle, Franklin L. Dodge, former government agent, today made it clear he wants to see George Remus, wife slayer, seated in the electric chair.

"He is guilty and a contemptible cad as well," said Dodge, seated in the prosecutor's office where he has aided in directing the case.

"I am anxious to get into that courtroom and face him so that his despicable lies about myself and Imogene Holmes Remus may be disproved," the former ace of the Ohio dry spies went on.

Will Testify This Week.

"Anyone who says I have not tried to face Remus is a liar. I am at the disposal of Prosecutor Charles P. Taft, II. He has not called me, but he probably will call me as the final rebuttal witness next week.

"I am eager to face Remus and be-

Talmadge Check For Entomology Fund Unhonored

Bank Turns Down Commissioner's Draft, Demanding Signature of Neese, Board Treasurer.

WORSHAM 'POSITIVE' NEESE WON'T SIGN

Second Bank Ties Up Bureau Funds Pending Settlement of Countersigning Differences.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Announced plans of Eugene Talmadge, commissioner of agriculture and ex-officio chairman of the state board of entomology, to regulate expenditures by the board, struck a snag Saturday.

A check for $3,044.76, drawn by the commissioner against an account of the board in an Atlanta bank and deposited with the state treasurer as horticultural fees, was returned to the treasurer unpaid because it lacked the counter-signature of W. L. Neese, assistant secretary and treasurer of the board.

Mr. Talmadge, after drawing the check Friday, said he desired to put the fees in the state treasury, where, he said, "they belong," and from whence they could not be drawn without a legislative appropriation.

The commissioner's move followed action by the board at a spirited meeting Thursday which, over Mr. Talmadge's protest, changed the method of disbursing money by the board. Mr. Talmadge, who previously had been signing the checks, was not named among those whose names should appear on checks issued by the board. In his stead was placed the name of E. Lee Worsham, state entomologist and secretary of the board.

Neese Ill at Home.

Mr. Neese was ill at his home here today but Mr. Worsham said he was "positive" Mr. Neese would not sign the check returned to the treasury. At the treasury, it was said the check would be held over until Monday, when it would be tendered Mr. Neese for his signature.

Mr. Neese was named assistant secretary, and treasurer of the board Thursday, despite vigorous protests by Mr. Talmadge, who said the law provided no such office.

Shortly before one Atlanta bank rejected unpaid the commissioner's check against the board of entomology a letter was made public from another bank here which said that the bank, owing to "discrepancy in instructions" made by Mr. Talmadge and Mr. Worsham as to payment of checks, could not honor further checks "until your views are in accord."

Mr. Worsham said he was "not alarmed" at this action, since the second bank had but "about $125 of the board's funds."

Talmadge Comments on Check.

When apprised of the return of the check Saturday Mr. Talmadge said he used the method of signing the check that has been in force several months. The check issued by Tal-

POLL OF LEGION ON PROHI VIEWS IS OPPOSED HERE

Atlanta and Georgia Legion Heads Condemn Proposal for Prohi Test Vote.

The request of Edward E. Spafford, national commander of the American Legion, for a nation-wide poll of Legion posts on the prohibition question is bitterly opposed by Asa Warren Candler, commander of the department of Georgia, and Frank Kempton, commander of Atlanta post, No. 1, they declared in unmistakable terms Saturday night.

Withdrawal of Commander Spafford's request was demanded Saturday by James A. Drain, past national commander of the legion, who contended that the national commander does not have "a right to direct or even suggest a poll on a highly controversial political question."

Commander Candler asserted that he personally will oppose such a poll to the end. Commander Kempton charged that he could only consider the proposed poll a political move by Commander Spafford, being as he is, he said, a New York man.

So far as Atlanta post, No. 1, is concerned, Commander Kempton declared, there will be no poll in that post.

Both Mr. Candler and Mr. Kempton said that from their own knowledge Georgia's legion posts are against the proposed poll.

Mr. Candler expressed extreme doubt that the departmental commanders annual conference, which meets in Indianapolis Monday, would approve the actions of the national commander in the matter.

"I know how so many of the department commanders feel," Mr. Candler said, "that I have no doubt but that action will be promptly taken at the conference to prevent such a poll.

WAVE OF BANDITRY SWEEPS OVER CITY SATURDAY NIGHT

Armed Desperadoes Rob Pedestrians and Stores; Several Persons Wounded by Bullets.

A wave of banditry, shooting, burglary and holdups swept over the city Saturday night, keeping city police, Grady hospital and private ambulances on the go and leaving in its wake two men in Grady with bullet wounds in their legs; several persons without their usual Saturday night "cash;" several grocery concerns without the day's receipts, and others reporting narrow escapes.

The boldest of the holdups occurred at Haygood and Sylvan avenues, when three negroes armed with pistols and rifles entered the grocery of Mrs. J. Tendrich, robbed the cash register of $10, robbed J. M. Neighbors, 35, of 1019 Sylvan avenue, of $7, and then fired at Neighbors seven times.

Neighbors was seated in the grocery when the bandits entered and, as they backed out, he attempted to summon G. W. Linam, a city police officer, but was felled by a bullet wound in his arm and several rifle shots in his right leg. He was rushed to Grady hospital in the ambulance of Ed Bond & Condon company, where doctors stated that his condition is not serious. Motorcycle Officers R. H. McLean and W. Tom Milam were dispatched to investigate.

Market Robbed.

The Community Market, at 499 Broyles street, was a victim of the same three negroes that shot Neighbors. The negroes held up Joe Weinman and Abe Weinman, operators, and secured $216 from the cash register and $5 from the pockets of Joe Weinman. They escaped in an automobile.

C. O. Williams, manager of an L. W. Rogers store at 926 Austin avenue, reported that a lone white man held him up and escaped with $25. Murray Thomas, also an employee in the store, was forced to "keep quiet" while the robbery was taking place. A description of the bandit was furnished Detectives J. C. Davis and W. J. Anderson.

An awkwardly-dressed white man, with burnt cork or soot smeared over his face, entered an L. W. Rogers grocery at 242 Piedmont avenue, held up the manager, J. M. Whitlock, and his son, and escaped with about $50 in cash, according to police reports.

Robber Described.

Police were told that the man had on a black coat, dark overalls and had a hat pulled down well over his eyes. He flashed a large pistol imme-

At Christmas Time!

DRAMATIC PARLEY AT NIGHT BRINGS PEACE TO EUROPE

Both Governments Now Will Begin Direct Negotiations for Establishing Good Relations.

TECHNICAL STATE OF WAR IS ENDED

League to Pass on Lithuanian Complaint of Ill Treatment of Her Nationals in Poland.

BY HENRY WOOD.

Geneva, December 10.—(United News.)—In a dramatic 15-minute session that convened at 10:45 tonight, the League of Nations approved a project that members hoped would end indefinitely the threat of war that had existed between Poland and Lithuania for seven years.

The meeting was called suddenly when after a day of negotiation Polish and Lithuanian negotiators found themselves in agreement over the text of a settlement the league council had offered.

Delegates appeared in all sorts of garb for their first public session and the public that attended—most of them newspaper men—matched them in variety of dress.

All Kinds of Garbs.

Chen Lo, Chinese president of the council; the German foreign minister, Herr Stresemann, and the British foreign minister, Sir Austen Chamberlain, were in evening dress. A half dozen other council members were in tuxedos. The rest wore assorted varieties of daytime clothes.

Most of the stenographers and women secretaries were in filmy evening gowns. Interpreters and men secretaries were dressed variously.

Premier Voldemaras, of Lithuania, was seated at the council table; Marshal Pilsudski, of Poland, sat next to newspapermen.

A resolution was submitted that the council declare that the technical state of war between Poland and Lithuania was incompatible with the spirit of the league covenant.

Vilna Point Unsettled.

The resolution noted the fact that Lithuania had stated she did not consider herself at war with Poland.

The resolution said that the settlement would in no way affect other questions on which difference of opinion still existed. That referred principally to the Vilna question.

The resolution noted that Poland had declared she recognized and would respect Lithuania's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. It recommended that both governments begin direct negotiations to establish good relations, and it placed the league's help at the disposal of the nations. It noted that both parties had decided to submit to the council Lithuania's complaint regarding Polish treatment of Luthuainans in Poland.

The resolution added that in the event of any incident between the two nations the league will be notified and will investigate.

It made note of the fact that Poland

No More Wars Called Hope Of Uncle Sam

Secretary Davis Replies to Letter Sent by Little Girl.

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—A letter from a little Pennsylvania girl addressed to "Dear Uncle Sam" and pleading that "My dear daddy and Uncle Oliver" be not sent to war "if they are any more wars," has reached Secretary Davis, of the war department, and drawn a reply from him that Uncle Sam hopes there will be no more wars.

"I want to ask you to do a favor for me," the letter, apparently the work of a 10-year-old, said. "If there are any more wars please do not make my dear daddy and Uncle Oliver go, because my mother has died. I only have my daddy, except my aunts. If you will do this for me, I will appreciate it very much."

Secretary Davis replied that Uncle Sam had asked him to inform the writer that he hoped "from the bottom of his heart that there will not be any more wars and he will do everything he can to prevent them."

ELEVATOR SHAFT FALL KILLS MAN

J. H. Duncan Dies in Mysterious Plunge to Basement of Trinity Avenue Building.

J. H. Duncan, 38, of Georgia avenue, was instantly killed early Saturday night when he fell three stories through an elevator shaft to the basement of a building at 171 Trinity avenue.

Mystery shrouds the accident in which Mr. Duncan was killed. Investigators stated that the elevator equipment is of the latest design, including safety doors and automatic controls at each floor.

It is impossible for the elevator to move either way until all of the doors are closed, and when once in operation the elevator will stop immediately if either of the doors should be opened.

Mr. Duncan, according to reports, fell from the second floor to the basement, and the elevator continued up to the third floor, where it was automatically stopped.

He was taking a customer to the third floor, when in some manner he fell off the car and into the shaft at the second floor. It was stated that

Ruth, Romola Fail To Speak As They Pass

Daughter of Mrs. Remus Snubs Daughter of Mother's Slayer.

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Cincinnati, Ohio, December 10.—A few stragglers in the corridors of Hamilton county courthouse today witnessed what was to have been the big scene of the Remus murder trial—Ruth Remus face to face with Romola Remus.

Romola flesh and blood of Killer George Remus, was walking alone to an exit when she passed Ruth, daughter of slain Imogene Remus by her first marriage.

Daughter against daughter—one trying to send the step-father who killed her mother to the electric chair, the other trying to save the father who killed an unloved step-mother. They stood silently for an instant.

Romola moved as though to speak, Ruth's big brown eyes gave no sign of recognition. She swept by without any indication she had seen Romola. Romola turned then and walked in the opposite direction.

The girls, when King George and Queen Imogene ruled bootleggaria in loving harmony, were never friendly. Since the murder, their friends say, their dislike has developed into hate.

"I feel very sorry for her," was all Ruth would say today. Romola would not comment on that strained moment when Ruth Remus snubbed her.

BORAH ACCEPTS INVITATION HERE

Idaho Senator To Be Guest of Atlanta Presidents' Club During Christmas Holidays.

A formal invitation was forwarded Saturday to United States Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, by officials of the Atlanta President's club to visit Atlanta during the Christmas holidays and be honor guest and principal speaker at an elaborate dinner, it was announced Saturday night.

An informal invitation was delivered to Senator Borah in Washington Thursday by Senators Harris and George of Georgia, Congressman Steele of the fifth congressional district, James B. Nevin, editor of the Atlanta Georgian and Sunday American, and Major John S. Cohen, editor of the Atlanta Journal. The investigation was extended at the request of President Mell R. Wilkinson and Colonel Frederick J. Paxon of the Presidents' club.

In answer to the informal invitation, Senator Borah said, "I appreciate very highly this invitation to visit your great city in the southeastern section of the nation. If we may agree upon a date during the holiday recess of congress I shall be pleased to accept."

Senator Borah is one of the foremost statesmen of the nation and has served as Senator from Idaho for three full terms and is now serving a fourth. He is chairman of the foreign relations committee of the senate, a distinct presidential possibility and a progressive republican.

Senator Borah was fully informed as to the plans and purposes of the organization known is the Atlanta Presidents' club, which is purely a non-political and non-factional body devoted whole-heartedly to the progress and advancement of Atlanta, Georgia and the south through the allied civic organizations of the capital city of Georgia.

MUSSOLINI SENDS VIOLIN TO CHEER CHILD IN NAPLES

Naples, Italy, December 10.—(AP)—Little Luigi Di Martino, proud possessor of a violin sent him by Premier Mussolini, is the happiest youngster in the local "Balilla" troups—an organization much like the Boy Scouts of America.

A week or so ago Luigi heard that Il Duce sought relaxation by playing the violin, and made bold to indite with his own chubby fist a letter to the chief of the Italian government, asking the boon of a discarded instrument. Premier Mussolini replied by sending the lad a violin just his own size, from which his parents cannot now separate him.

Lee Ashcraft Is Made Chevalier of Legion

HIGH HONOR AWARDED ATLANTA MAN

For valuable service rendered as an organizer during the world war, the French government has made Lee Ashcraft, of the Ashcraft-Wilkinson company here, a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. The distinction is seldom conferred by France for other than brilliant military service.

The diploma conferring this honor, one of the highest conferred by the continental republic, was transmitted to Mr. Ashcraft through the French consul at New Orleans.

Mr. Ashcraft's service to France was rendered during the early days of the war, when German potash mines in Alsace-Lorraine were captured.

Inexperienced in this field, the French government sought the aid of the Ashcraft-Wilkinson company, with the result that Mr. Ashcraft went abroad and successfully organized markets to handle the potash output, about half of which was absorbed by America.

With the merger, some time ago, of French and German potash interests, the services of the local company were no longer required, but the republic bore Mr. Ashcraft's service in mind.

Mell R. Wilkinson, business partner with Mr. Ashcraft since 1912, expressed his gratification at the award, affirming that it was won by a great deal of hard work and well directed effort on the part of the recipient. Mr. Wilkinson was associated in the work and contributed much to its success, his business associates say.

Mr. Ashcraft has long been an outstanding figure in the business and civic life of Atlanta. He is past president of the chamber of commerce, a Rotarian, member of the executive committee of the Presidents' club and past national president of the S. A. E. fraternity alumni association.

He is a director of the Fourth National bank.

When Atlanta was swept by the disastrous fire several years ago, Asa G. Candler, then mayor of Atlanta, appointed Mr. Ashcraft as director of relief work here, he later becoming interested in the affairs of the local Red Cross organization, in which he has since played a prominent part.

Gridiron Club Grills Would-Be Presidents

Washington, December 10.—(United News.)—President Coolidge and some of his would-be successors were grilled tonight by the Gridiron club, famous organization of Washington correspondents.

The Gridiron Opera company presented as the masterpiece of the evening's roasting a musical version of Julius Caesar, which offered an opportunity to chaff politicians and presidential aspirants, some of whom were present.

In the midst of a storm from the west, two Roman citizens, muffled in their togas, saw a herald approaching.

"Citizens, I have terrible news," announced Scipio Sanders, the herald, otherwise the president's secretary. Julius Coolidge hath put aside the crown!"

A delegatiton of Roman aristocrats —other republican leaders—appeared bearing an enormous gold crown on a scarlet cushion.

The four tribunes—Horatio Hoover, Decius Dawes, Lucius Lowden and Nero Norris—refused to accept the crown. Flavius Fess, in great perturbation, shouted:

"Great Jupiter, citizens, don't let Julius Coolidge put aside the crown!

"Do you think a lot of us senators want to go back to work?"

Flavius Fess sang: "Oh What'll we Do, What'll We Do, to Make Coo, Coo, Coolidge Stay?" The Romans commanded Flavius Fess "to tell

U. S. HIGHWAY BILL IS $1,000,000,000

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—The nation's yearly highway bill exceeds $1,000,000,000, including all expenditures of the federal, state, county and other local governments, for construction, maintenance and administration. In making this announcement today, Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the bureau of public roads, said the federal government's expenditure was less than 8 per cent, and the states spent, of their own funds, more than six times the amount they received as federal aid.

Federal expenditure at the current rate, Mr. MacDonald said, is not extravagant, but is, in fact, extremely moderate in view of the large and growing interstate traffic. Federal payments last year totaled $81,371,013 or about $6,000,000 less than the previous year which in turn was $8,000,000 lower than the year before. It may be expected, Mr. MacDonald said, that the annual expenditure will be still further reduced in the future until the accumulated balances of earlier appropriations being expended—the program of expenditures reaches the rate set by the annual authorization of $75,000,000 of recent years.

$700,000 Given Congress Library By Rockefeller

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has presented the library of congress with $700,000, the larger part of which is to be used in the acquisition of source material for American history.

The gift was made last May, but was announced today for the first time in the annual report of Herbert Putnam, the librarian. Of the gift $450,000 is to be used for the historical research project and $250,000 for the enlargement of the bibliograph apparatus of the library in the interest of its information service to other libraries and to research investigators.

Other gifts reported by Putnam were those of Joseph Pennell and Archer M. Huntington, both of New York, totaling $400,000; and the private collections of John Boyd Thatcher, bequeathed by his widow, Mrs. Emma Treadwell Thatcher, of Albany, N. Y., and the late Harry Houdini, the magician.

Top — Artist's sketch of the first Muse store, a 38 Whitehall. Here Mr George Muse started hi store 48 years ago About 10 years later W W. Orr, in his teens came up from Dawson and entered the business as bookkeeper.

After 23 years in the first little store, Muse's moved to 3-5-7 Whitehall, on the viaduct, (pictured above). Here W. W. Orr was credit manager, and then secretary and treasurer. After Mr. George Muse passed on, in 1917, Mr. Orr became president of the company.

Here is our present home—at Peachtree, Walton and Broad streets. To here we moved in March, 1921. Since then Muse branches have opened in Hotels Henry Grady and Biltmore.

Our friend, and our president, Mr. W. W. Orr, has gone on . . . and yet, he is here, in all of us . . . the vision that he gave us: the ideals that he set for us; the great hope that he inspired in every one of us is here . . . this is our very selves!

In humility we accept his mantle . . . and with courage we catch the torch he throws. To hold it high we dedicate ourselves.

48 years ago Mr. George Muse started this store, in a twenty-foot front, two-story building on Whitehall. Some ten years later William W. Orr, of Dawson, became bookkeeper of the store . . . a modest, retiring young man, who kept the books, and sold merchandise, and stacked the suits at dusk and took every task that came to hand, and in it all saw the spirit that had caught Mr. Muse, and his great determination that was giving to Atlanta and the South this store "that stood upon a rock; that stood by the book."

When Mr. George Muse went on, in 1917, 'twas our Mr. Orr who took the wheel and guided the store to the enviable glory, that crystallized six years ago in the magnificent seven stories at Peachtree, Walton and Broad that are our home today.

Each year has more than justified our move to Peachtree; the shopping center of Atlanta has moved this way; last year was the best year in the history of the store; this year is exceeding last year—

Our two-fold heritage . . . the vision and ideals of Mr. George Muse and Mr. Orr . . . lead us on to a still greater Muse's.

We thank God for them . . . and for the bright future in which we, the men and women of Muse's, will KEEP THE FAITH.

'TALKATIVE JUROR' TO BE U. S. WITNESS

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—With Edward J. Kidwell, alleged talkative juror in the Fall-Sinclair oil conspiracy case, again a central figure, government attorneys were busy today arranging their proceedure at resumption of the hearing Monday of the criminal contempt proceedings against Harry F. Sinclair, William J. Burns, and their associates. Kidwell will be summoned as a government witness.

Repeatedly he has tried to get before Justice Siddons, of the District of Columbia supreme court, his denial of affidavits made by Don K. King, a newspaper reporter, and J. Ray Akers, a former street car conductor, that he talked too freely about the case which ended in a mistrial. To be called as a government witness would accomplish his purpose to some extent, though objections might prevent much of his denial getting into the records.

RAIL EXTENSION CASE IS UNDER ADVISEMENT

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Applications of the Piedmont & Northern railroad for authority to build 126 miles of new railroad in the North Carolina-South Carolina border territory were submitted today to the interstate commerce commission for final decision after nine hours of legal oratory in closing arguments. Charles Evans Hughes, leading counsel for the Piedmont company, and L. E. Jeffries, vice president of the Southern railway, which is opposing the Piedmont project, summed up their contentions on the prolonged controversy.

Jeffries emphatically stated the position of the Southern railway was that sufficient railroad facilities now existed in the territory and that no new investment of capital in railroad extensions was justified.

Questioned by commissioners as to whether the Southern would be willing to allow the Piedmont company trackage rights in case of a refusal to allow the construction, Jefferies protested that he could not properly speak for his company on such a point. He declared, however, that the Southern railway would, in his opinion, object to sharing its traffic with the Piedmont by trackage arrangements.

Hughes reviewed the evidence to demonstrate again that the Piedmont & Northern had proven a reasonable necessity and justification for its extension program. The Duke power interests, he said, had been attacked by the Southern railway unfairly in the proceedings because the Southern had shared the prosperity created by the hydroelectric development in South and North Carolina. He asked the commission to disregard the objections of the trunk lines and to allow the Piedmont & Northern to proceed.

University Roll Contains Names Of 362 Women

Athens, Ga., December 9.—(Special.)—The young women of Georgia are taking advantage of every educational opportunity offered them by the state, Miss Annie Brumby, dean of women at the University of Georgia, said in a recent talk to the university radio audience.

Three hundred and sixty-two are now registered for long term courses in law, medicine, pharmacy, journalism, commerce, agriculture and the various courses leading to the bachelor of arts degree, it was pointed out.

In general, the scholarship of the women students is good and a far smaller per cent of women than men are doing unsatisfactory work, said Miss Brumby.

Miss Brumby further stated that all of the available dormitory space is taken by the girls. Soule hall on the campus of the agricultural college, a freshman house off the campus, the chancellor's old house on the university campus and three fraternity houses accommodate the girls. The immediate need of a large modern dormitory is apparent if the ever-increasing number of Georgia girls are to be given the advantage of a higher education.

Women were admitted to the university nine years ago; 20 were graduated in 1920.

In the ordinary's race H. L. Thomas led D. O. Kelly, incumbent, by 14 votes, Thomas receiving 1,031 votes to Kelly's 1,017. Mrs. Ettie Osborn Davis was third with 557 votes.

A complete new board of county commissioners was elected, those elected being S. B. Hoge, John Knox, B. S. Williams, D. L. McLaughlin and W. F. McEachin.

For coroner, W. B. Harrell, incumbent, led the field, receiving 1,765 votes against 906 for his three opponents.

The runover race for sheriff and ordinary will be held some time within the next ten days.

ROGERS IS GIVEN BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF MEXICO BY AIR

Mexico City, December 10.—(AP)—Will Rogers saw part of Mexico from an airplane today. Piloted by Major Augustin Castrejon, of the Mexican army aviation service and accompanied by General Alvarez, chief of the presidential staff, Rogers made a flight of several hours over the Valley of Mexico and over the summit of the great mountain Ixtacihuatl.

General Alvarez, who is Calles' right-hand military man, received a pilot's license today.

Ixtacihuatl, in Aztec means "sleeping woman," the outlines of the mountain resembling a woman in repose.

"She is some woman," said Rogers, "beats any flapper I ever saw."

COMPULSORY FARM SERVICE IS URGED FOR EVERY CITIZEN

New York, December 10.—(AP)—Compulsory farm service for every citizen is recommended by Dr. Charles A. Browne, chief of the United States bureau of chemistry.

"Two years of life on a farm," he said in a statement issued today by the American Chemical society, "would be a far greater assaurance of the nation's welfare than two years of military service. A compulsory apprenticeship in agriculture would provide a needed discipline in economy and thrift and would form more correct opinions as to the basic elements of national prosperity."

Vocational Education Board Employs Expert Hog Raiser To Teach Swine Production

Frank C. Wickham To Conduct Special Classes in 13 Rural Communities in Southwest Georgia.

Athens, Ga., December 10.—(Special.)—The Georgia state board for vocational education announces that it has employed Frank C. Wickham, an experienced hog breeder and feeder, to teach a special course in swine production to classes of adult farmers in 13 rural communities of southwest Georgia.

Mr. Wickham, who has been engaged in the hog business in Iowa for many years, moved to Colquitt county, Georgia, about two years ago, and since that time has been engaged in buying feeder hogs and growing them out to number ones before marketing. He is also slowly developing a hog-breeding business.

The farmers in Colquitt and adjoining counties learned of Mr. Wickham's success with hogs and were very anxious for him to meet with them in groups at night and give instruction of a practical nature concerning hog production.

Ten Meetings Planned.

The Georgia state board for vocation education has agreed to pay Mr. Wickham to meet for ten nights with groups of farmers in communities where vocational agriculture is being taught in the high schools of southwest Georgia.

The following are the schools and communities where the classes are being held: Funston Consolidated, Ty Ty Consolidated, Okapilco Consolidated, Colquitt County, Warwick High, Sumner High, Sylvester High, Worth County, Sales City High, Camilla High, Pelham High, Hopeful Consolidated, Mitchell County, Hahira High, Lowndes County, Pavo High, Thomas County.

The evening classes are organized by the local agricultural teachers who give some of the instruction. These meetings are attended by but small groups of 15 to 40 farmers who are interested in improving their hog production practices. The information they receive is generally put into practice immediately on their farms.

Associated With Nighbert.

Mr. Wickham has been closely associated with Dr. E. M. Nighbert, who is in charge of the swine sanitation work that is being carried on at Moultrie, Ga., by the United States department of agriculture.

The information concerning the control of parasites in hogs that has been given out by Dr. Nighbert, is being carried direct to the farmers through these special night classes.

The adult farmers enrolled in these special classes are being taught how to grow hogs under what is called "sanitary conditions" as recommended by Dr. Nighbert.

In addition to meeting with the classes and discussing hog problems in general, Mr. Wickham is planning to visit the farm of each class member at least three times during the year and talk over individual problems and make suggestions to each farmer as to the best method of procedure.

U. S. PENITENTIARY BADLY CONGESTED

The Atlanta federal penitentiary is experiencing the worst congestion in its history.

This statement was made Saturday night by Warden John W. Snook when it was revealed that the prison count for the day was 3,116.

The actual count of the prison population has gone over Saturday's count on at least two occasions, when the count rose to 3,264, but since then accommodations for 250 prisoners have been done away with by the conversion of a dormitory into a part of the prison duck mill, so that the prison is now overcrowded compared to accommodations by 102 more men than at any previous peak of population in its history.

In order to relieve the already burdened cells of the surplus population, newly arrived prisoners are being cared for on cots placed in the dormitory corridors. Warden Snook said that the prison has received 1,000 new prisoners since July 8.

Another Sunday Imperils You on Automobile Jaunts

Another Sunday is here, with crowded highways and increased traffic accident hazards.

When you take the old bus out for a family airing this afternoon, will you be exposed to dangers against which you and your loved ones are not financially prepared? Will you be listed among the casualties? Will you know what want is? Will your family's future be made gloomy?

"It's well to pause and answer these questions in this day of speeding autos and daily accident horrors. Protect yourself and your loved ones with insurance against this great common peril. Don't delay. Do it at once.

The Constitution offers you the famous $7,500 travel accident policy issued by the North American Insurance company, of Chicago. This old and reliable concern already has paid more than $53,000 in claims to Constitution policyholders.

The policy, which costs only $1.25 per year provides for payment of sums ranging from $7,500 in case of death resulting from certain accidents; heavy cash payment for permanent injuries and $10 weekly indemnity for disability resulting from the stated accidents. And the cost is only a fraction of a penny a day.

A train wreck, a crash of automobiles, the speeding wheels of an onrushing car or a burning building may leave you a victim of the ever-growing wave of accidents today.

In this paper appear regular advertisements supplying full details of the great offer. Watch for them.

This $7,500 travel, $2,000 auto and $1,000 pedestrian accident policy is issued only to subscribers of The Daily and Sunday Constitution and immediate dependent members of a subscriber's family between the ages of 17 and 70 at $1.25 per year.

One who is now taking The Daily and Sunday Constitution or will subscribe for same through carrier in Atlanta or suburbs, through an out-of-town carrier or dealer, paying for his paper weekly, monthly or otherwise, is a subscriber and is eligible.

Those taking The Daily and Sunday Constitution by mail, either through a postoffice or rural route delivery for one year are eligible by paying $1.25 per year per policy above the subscription price.

In sending applications for insurance the applicant must state name in full, give age and occupation. If beneficiary is desired, full Christian name must be given and relation of same to the insured.

Macon Financial Institutions Concluding Prosperous Year

Macon, Ga., December 10.—(Special.)—Macon banks have had a prosperous year, the reports of officers to the stockholders of the various financial institutions of the city will show, notwithstanding the fact that money has been plentiful and cheap.

It is anticipated that several of the banks in addition to the dividends that will be paid to the stockholders will declare a bonus to employees, though in some instances there will be Christmas trees and personal gifts to the employees, rather than the bonus plan.

T. G. Tarver, head of the local branch of the Citizens & Southern National bank, announced today that a bonus of 10 per cent of the annual salary will be paid to each employe of that bank. This means payment of $80,000 in the entire system, or about $6,000 to the Macon employees alone. In addition to this the local branch of the Citizens & Southern National has a dining room in which it furnishes free lunches to the employees and also carries group insurance on all employees.

The Citizens and Southern expects to make the final payment of its annual 12 per cent dividend the first of the year.

The Fourth National bank will have its annual meeting on the second Tuesday of January, at which it is expected that the usual semi-annual dividend of 5 per cent will be ordered paid.

The stockholders of the Macon National bank also will meet the second Tuesday in January, at which time the regular quarterly dividend of 2 1-2 per cent will be paid, it is expected.

The Macon Savings bank has declared a quarterly dividend of 4 per cent and an additional dividend of 2 per cent, on $50,000 stock, payable on January 1.

The semi-annual meeting of the Luther Williams Bank and Trust company will be held on Wednesday of the coming week, at which it is expected that the regular 5 per cent semi-annual dividend will be ordered paid.

The annual meeting of the Merchants and Mechanics bank will be held the third Tuesday in January. This bank has been paying 12 per cent dividends and it is indicated that the same rate will prevail this year.

The Georgia Banking company and the Continental Trust company, newer banks in the commercial field, also will pay substantial dividends on the capital stock, it is understood.

Junior League Chorus Girls Playing This Week in Forsyth Comedy 'Irene'

Six of the ten thoroughly personable and attractive young ladies of the Junior league who will participate in the musical comedy, "Irene," which will be presented at the Forsyth theater all this week. The entire proceeds of the Monday night show will be turned over to the league for its charities. Those of the league who will take part are Misses Ann Trimble, Jeanette Bailey, Frances Floyd, Margaret MacIntyre, Edyth Coleman, Harriet Shedden, Jennie Hodgson, Edna Belle Raine, Katherine Murphy and Mrs. Preston Arkwright, Jr.

Among the various amusements offered this coming week, none holds more entertainment value than the presentation this week at the Forsyth theater of "Irene," sponsored by the Junior league, and the entire proceeds of the Monday night performances will be donated to the Junior league to be used for the support of its ward in the Egleston Memorial hospital for children, at which time not only will the purchaser of the ticket receive face value in musical comedy entertainment but he will also have the pleasure of knowing that every cent of his money goes to a worthy cause. Ten of the young ladies of the Junior league will participate in the production, to be staged by the Forsyth players, and those who have witnessed rehearsals vouch for the fact that there never was a more attractive chorus on an Atlanta stage. The young ladies who will participate are: Misses Ann Trimble, Jennette Bailey, Frances Floyd, Margaret MacIntyre, Edyth Coleman, Harriet Shedden, Jennie Hodgson, Edna Belle Raine, Katherine Murphy and Mrs. Preston Arkwright, Jr.

"Irene," itself, is known the country over a sheing perhaps the most perennially popular of all the musical comedy vehicles written for the stage, and in its presentation this week at the Forsyth it is assured excellent interpretation both by the Forsyth players and by the young ladies of the Junior league.

M. Rich and Brothers company will furnish all shoes for the presentation of "Irene" and J. P. Allen and company will supply the costumes, for an elaborate and beautiful show which will be interpolated into the musical comedy.

Although the Junior leaguers will participate in the show the entire week, it is urged that those who can, make arrangements to attend on Monday night, the entire revue of which performance will go to the league.

MEDAL IS VOTED COL. LINDBERGH

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—With speed comparable to that made by the "Spirit of St. Louis" across the lonely Atlantic, the house today voted the congressional medal of honor to Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh after he had been the center of an enthusiastic reception on the house floor.

Senate approval still is necessary before the award can be made by President Coolidge. The senate was in recess today, and action on the house bill could not be obtained.

The vote of the house was unanimous to consider a bill to confer the medal, the highest award of the nation for its heroes, but members never had a chance actually to vote on its final passage.

"The bill is passed," Speaker Longworth notified his colleagues the minute reading of the measure was concluded and members, instead of voting, could only applaud again.

This action came just a few minutes after Lindbergh had been accorded the privilege of the floor. The youthful flier had been escorted to the chamber by Representatives Tilson and Garrett, the republican and democratic leaders, and introduced to the house by the speaker as "America's most attractive citizen."

A moment's pause followed the announcement and Lindbergh, the man who braved alone the flight from New York to Paris, stood blushing like a school boy in the vast chamber which years ago he frequently visited when his father was a representative from Minnesota.

Tilson then called to his colleagues to form a line and all of the more than 200 members on the floor responded at once. Lindbergh, more cool and collected, grasped the hand of each as they filed by.

After the members, the house pages scampered into line and with unrestrained enthusiasm, nudged and pushed each other until the last had passed by. At the rear were officers and employees of the house. Among them was Joseph J. Sinnott, a democratic employee, who in the days of the Wilson administration had been the doorkeeper of the house.

Joe took the aviator's hand and said:

"Young fellow, you haven't forgotten the day you used to hang around my desk?"

"Sure, I recall you very well."

"I thought that maybe you'd forgotten me."

Silence in Galleries.

While this was going on there was silence in the galleries to which dozens of persons had hurried as soon as the word spread about the capitol that Lindbergh would appear in the house.

The bill to confer the medal was presented by Chairman Snell, of the rules committee. A similar proposal by Senator Hawes, democrat, Missouri, has been introduced in the senate.

The medal approved by the house for Lindbergh is similar to the one conferred by the last congress upon Commander Richard E. Byrd for his flight across the north pole.

In Lindbergh's case it was awarded, the bill said, for the flight from New York to Paris, by which "he not only achieved the greatest individual triumph of any American citizen, but demonstrated that travel across the ocean by aircraft was possible."

Lindbergh is making plans for another international flight—this time to Mexico—but he said today that he had not fixed any date yet for his departure from Washington, although it probably would be within 10 days.

He also has received an invitation to fly to Havana, Cuba, but has not considered such a flight at the present time.

Blonde Ruth Is Sent Doll As Xmas Gift

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

New York, December 10.—A doll, a series of books on moral topics and money have been sent to Sing Sing as Christmas presents to Mrs. Ruth Brown Snyder, and from that coign of disadvantage, the death house, she has been able to accept only the money, it was learned today.

The books were returned, ostensibly for the reason that prison rules provide books must be sent direct from a reputable publishing house. The doll, about three feet tall, Warden Lawes refused to allow Mrs. Snyder to have, but ordered it sent to her mother, Mrs. Josephine Brown, who is the guardian of the blonde murderess' nine-year-old daughter, Lorraine.

But a check for $25 from a friend and a money order for $1 from a stranger, which the warden gave Mrs. Snyder a chance to decline, were accepted by her.

Henry Judd Gray, tried and convicted with her for the murder of her husband, Albert Snyder, and now confined in the same death house, has been more aloof about Christmas presents. A check for $25, sent by an acquaintance, was today on its way back through the mails to the donor, for Gray would not accept it.

HAVE A GOOD TIME AT COLLEGE, VASSAR PROFESSOR URGES

Pittsburgh, December 10.—(AP)—The student who goes to college to have a good time has the right idea, in the opinion of Dr. Annie Louise Macleod, head of the department of euthenics at Vassar.

"Education means many things to many people," said Dr. Macleod, addressing the faculty, executives and students at the University of Pittsburgh. To a liberal arts college it means culture; to a vocational institution it means preparing to earn a living, but to the average undergraduate college it means a place to have a good time. And that is the nearest answer to the three, for we all seek happiness.

"If the average girl at Vassar comes to class tardily, listens reluctantly and leaves precipitately, it is because she lacks a sense of value. This, alone with health and a feeling of power, are necessary to happiness. The real purpose of education is to supply all three."

TRIAL OF HOOKS TO OPEN MONDAY

Americus, Ga., December 10.—(Special.)—Preparations are complete for the trial of Sammy Hooks, charged with assault, which will begin in superior court Monday morning. Hooks is a member of a prominent and influential Sumter county family. It is alleged that young Hooks entered the home of a prominent Americus man, during last April, and there attempted a criminal assault upon a young Americus girl. Her assailant escaped upon the arrival of other occupants of the home. The attack occurred after midnight, and young Hooks was arrested after a lengthy investigation.

The principal evidence against him, it is stated, consists of alleged finger prints found within the home by W. C. Dash, of Macon. It is expected that the defense will base its case upon an alibi, to support which a large array of witnesses have been summoned.

Jule Felton, solicitor general of the circuit, who is prosecuting young Hooks, has been subpoenaed as a witness for the defense, and other defense witnesses are Ben McMath, Sam Lott, Heys Arnold, W. M. Edwards, Carl A. Parsons, O. L. Dixon, Jr., Lovelace Eve, W. W. Dykes, Jr., George D. Wheatley, Levi Tower, Dr. W. J. Smith, T. M. Lauey, L. J. Stevens, Will Dudley, Jr., R. P. Stackhouse, R. G. Christian, W. M. Brannon, H. P. Everett, M. J. Wright, Thomas B. Hooks, Mrs. Nannie Lou Hooks and Patience Smith.

Witnesses for the state are Dr. H. A. Smith, R. E. Hearn, Mrs. W. W. McNeill, W. W. McNeill, Jr., P. C. Gilmore, T. L. Summers, E. O. Sandlin, W. C. Dean and John Mills. It is expected that Judge Frank C. McLaughlin, of Columbus, will preside during the trial, and that several days will be consumed in hearing evidence and making arguments before the case is submitted to a jury.

Wilbur Depicts Navy's Activities In Time of Peace

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—The wide field of peace-time activities open to a modern day navy was graphically described today in the annual report of Secretary Wilbur, who told of ocean searches for lost aviators; the navy's part in Mississippi flood rescue work; the operations of American ships in Chinese and Nicaraguan waters and of the work of marines and bluejackets ashore on foreign soil.

With all of these duties to be performed, Wilbur said the navy had carried on with the personnel so reduced that one ship could not be placed in active service until another was put into drydock. This process had gone on until it was seriously affecting the efficiency of the operations of the fleet. The operating plan of seagoing forces in 1927 was based on an enlisted strength of 86,000 men but only 82,932 men were available because of the limitation fixed by congressional appropriation.

More Money Recommended.

Legislation proposing an increased attendance at the Naval academy and higher appropriations for the enlisted personnel, was recommended to relieve the shortage of officers and men now keenly felt throughout the service.

The failure of the Geneva conference, the report said, "requires a building program to meet our legitimate requirements for national defense and to maintain the 5-5-3 ratio in cruisers and aircraft carriers. Replacement tonnage in destroyers will soon be needed."

Except for the completion of major alterations in the battleships New York, Texas and Wyoming, the material condition of vessels of the fleet was maintained as during the previous year, the report said. The modernization of the Oklahoma and Nevada, authorized by congress, had been delayed awaiting the appropriation of necessary funds. Five more battleships of the Oklahoma class should be modernized, making with the Oklahoma and Nevada, seven in all to be so treated, the report said.

The Asiatic fleet and the special service squadron bore the brunt of the year's activities. The situation in China called for extensive additions to the fleet and unusual activity in the protection of American lives and property in areas affected by the Chinese disturbances.

Battle Fleet Called On.

The special service squadron, the duties of which include the protection of American interests in Central America, operated on such a large scale as to require various units of the battle fleet to assist in work in Nicaragua.

Facilities of the naval air station at Pensacola, Fla., were made available to the Red Cross for relief and rescue work in the Mississippi flood area. As many as 32 planes were in constant use for months and every demand for seaplanes was met. Patrols flew over the stricken area, aiding in the rescue of thousands of persons.

A total of 54 vessels from the battle fleet took part in the search for missing Dole flight planes. The total area searched was approximately 350,000 miles, some of which was covered several times. The total amount of fuel oil and gasoline expended in the search was about 3,835,050 gallons. The excess cost of this fuel was approximately $77,142.29.

Couple Wed After Pace Around Globe

Chicago, December 10.—(AP)—Mrs. Emily Borie Ryerson, wealthy Chicago widow, and Forsythe Sherfezee, financial adviser to the Chinese government at Pekin, were married here today.

Mrs. Ryerson, after difficulties unforeseen and unavoidable, had delayed her wedding, obtained the marriage license herself, giving her age as 62, that of Mr. Sherfezee as 45 and his residence as Charleston, S. C.

Mr. Sherfezee was delayed two days on the Pacific by heavy seas. On his way across the continent his train was caught in the severe cold that gripped the northwest. An airplane sent from Chicago to St. Paul to meet him was late in taking off because motor trucks, on the way to refuel it, were caught in snow banks. The plane did not arrive until 6 o'clock last night, the wedding was to have been held at noon yesterday.

The word "obey" was omitted from the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherfezee left for New York and will sail December 13 for Italy.

FRENCH ACES DIE AS PLANE FALLS

Paris, December 10.—(United News.)—Spectators at Le Bourget flying field, scene of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh's triumphal completion of his trans-Atlantic flight, witnessed today an air tragedy resulting in the death of Charles Pierre Corbu, famous French aviator, and M. La Coste, his mechanic.

Corbu and La Coste, who had taken up a plane to test its 400-horsepower motor, seemed to lose control of their craft. It was still in full view of the spectators, having attained an altitude of more than 800 feet.

Suddenly the plane turned over in the air and first one wing and then another crumpled. As those witnessing the tragedy cried out helplessly, La Coste was seen to jump from the craft. A few minutes later his body was found. It appeared he had met instant death when he fell. Corbu remained in the plane and his body was horribly mutilated.

Corbu had been flying since 1920, when he was 18 years old. Last summer he attracted international attention when he made a false start with Leon Givon on a flight to New York in a Farman Bluebird plane. He was known as the 'human direction finder," due to his unusual ability to fly without maps. His intimates called him "Pigeon."

After six years in the military service he joined the Farman airplane lines and was a regular pilot on the Paris-Brussels-Amsterdam and the Paris-Cologne-Essen-Berlin air routes.

REVIVAL MUSIC SCORED AS "JAZZ" BY CHOIR LEADER

Chicago, December 10.—(AP)—Church music, especially that directed by professional musicians without religious convictions, is often so full of jazz that it sends young people to the public dance hall, John Finley Williamson, choir director and music critic of Dayton, Ohio, told several hundred Northwestern university students.

He classed the old-fashioned church hymnal as "a half-pious jazz music sheet." Some hymns represent open blasphemy, he said.

THREE CHLDREN BURNED TO DEATH AS HOME IS RAZED

Moberly, Mo., December 10.—(AP)—Three children of Mr. and Mrs. Barney Stephens were burned to death and the parents suffered serious burns in a fire early today which destroyed their home one mile south of Moberly.

The children, Maurine, 7; Barney, Jr., 9, and Martha Lydia, 11, were sleeping in a room adjoining the room occupied by their mother, who managed to escape only after being seriously burned about the face and arms.

Stephens, who operates a small dairy, had arisen at 3 a. m., and, after building fires in the stoves, had left for the barn to milk. He heard his wife's screams and rushed to the house, which he found in a mass of flames.

He was badly burned about the body attempting to reach the children.

Washington Society Borrows Opera Ball From Old World

A colorful custom of Europe, the opera ball, will bring out capital society on the night of December 7. The debutante committee for the event includes, at top, Janet Phillips (left) and Evelyn Walker and, lower right, Exiiona Hamilton. Among the guests will be Princess Elizabeth (lower left), daughter of Prince de Ligne, Belgian ambassador.

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Washington society will sweep into the pageantry of an old-world opera ball tomorrow night as part of the National Opera company's festival week.

Brilliant costumes, elaborate decorations and a list of patronesses and boxholders which includes the prominent in official and diplomatic Washington promise to make the ball one of the outstanding events of the social season.

Inspired by the opera balls of the Paris Grand Opera company, Edouard Albion, director of the National Opera company, decided to break the furious activity of the week with a ball at which the artists would be guests of honor. Hardly had the announcement been made when the event assumed unusual proportions.

The list of patronesses includes Mrs. Charles G. Dawes, wife of the vice president; Lady Isabella Howard, wife of the British ambassador; Princess Albert de Ligne, wife of the Belgian ambassador; Mrs. William M. Jardine, wife of the secretary of agriculture; Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, wife of the speaker of the house, and a score of others equally prominent.

The debutante committee embraces all of the popular debs who have helped make the capital social season one of the most important in years. Miss Evelyn Walker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Walker, is chairman. The committee includes Signorina Theodoria Catalani, niece of the second counselor of the Italian embassy; Peggy Burch, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Preston Burch, and Miss Janet Phillips, daughter of former Representative and Mrs. Thomas W. Phillips.

Edouard Capitane, ranking tenor of the Opera Comique in Paris and the Monte Carlo opera, who was selected by the French minister of fine arts to represent his country in the festival week productions, will be near the head of the receiving line, as will be Luella Melius, coloratura prima donna; Mary Lewis, American soprano; Jeanne Gordon, mezzo soprano from the Metropolitan Opera company, and Dorothy Speare, young soprano who made her American debut in Thomas' "Mignon" Monday night.

The opera ball will become an annual affair hereafter, as a part of the National Opera company's festival week.

New York Physician Perfects Simple and Easy Method of Reducing Weight.

Dr. R. Newman, a licensed practicing physician, of 286 Fifth avenue, New York, announces that he has perfected a treatment which has quickly rid fat people of excess weight. What is more remarkable is the Doctor's statement that he has successfully treated thousands of patients for fat reduction without unnecessary change of diet or burdensome exercise. He also says that fat people who suffer from chronic rheumatism, gout, asthma and high blood pressure obtain great relief from the reduction of their superfluous flesh. Realizing that this sounds almost too good to be true, the Doctor has offered to send without charge to anyone who will write him, a free trial treatment to prove his claims, as well as his "Pay-when-reduced" plan. If you want to rid yourself of superfluous fat, write him today, addressing Dr. R. Newman, 286 Fifth avenue, New York City, Dept. R.—(adv.)

COAL OPERATORS BLOCKING PARLEY

Pittsburgh, December 10.—(AP)—Three rejections and one acceptance by large coal producing companies of the Pittsburgh district were sent to Secretary of Labor Davis today in reply to his invitation for a conference of operators and union leaders in Washington Tuesday to discuss the miners' strike. Officials of the United Mine Workers accepted the invitation, and at the same time charged that one of the companies refusing to attend the conference had attempted to deceive Secretary Davis, distorting and falsifying the reason given for the rejection.

The Pittsburgh Coal company, Pittsburgh Terminal Coal corporation and the Vesta Coal company informed the secretary that they would not attend the conference, while the Bertha Consumers company accepted the invitation. The Vesta company is a subsidiary of the Jones and Laughlin Steel corporation.

"Distortion" Charged.

In a letter to Secretary Davis tonight, Philip Murray, international vice president of the United Mine Workers, claimed that J. D. A. Morrow, president of the Pittsburgh Coal company, in attempting to justify his refusal to attend the conference, had "distorted the situation," adding "his message is a fabrication of deliberate falsehoods."

Morrow wired the secretary that his company "will stand by its present employees and policies." The company has been operating non-union for two years, and was the first Pittsburgh district producer to sever relations with the union.

"No Good" Is Seen.

The Terminal corporation held the conference would take up the question of a union wage agreement, and added "we do not care to join in such a discussion," feeling "that no good could now come out of a conference such as the one planned."

Vesta officials said the labor secretary could make public its reasons for refusal if he so desired.

Bertha company officials pointed out that the concern was operating full capacity, with non-union labor, and the present situation "is now peaceful and satisfactory" but "we are always willing to cooperate with the president and yourself and will attend the meeting."

CARSON SUCCUMBS TO POWDER BURNS

Cartersville, Ga., December 10.—(Special.)—R. P. Carson, 21, well-known young Atlantan, who was severely burned in a powder blast near here Friday, died today on a train which was transporting him to an Atlanta hospital. According to information reaching here, the body was carried into Atlanta and placed in charge of a funeral director there.

Mr. Carson suffered frightful burns about the head, chest, abdomen and legs in the explosion, which occurred Friday afternoon. He had been sent to Cartersville by his father, who was engaged in road building operations at Rydal, ten miles from here, to purchase a supply of dynamite and black powder. During the process of loading the explosives on Carson's truck, one of the cans of powder, for some unknown reason, exploded.

His clothing a mass of flames, Carson dashed down the road and was overtaken by William Dodgen and a negro, who had been assisting in the loading. The two succeeded in extinguishing the flames, which almost completely enveloped Carson, but not before the youth's clothing had been practically consumed and his body terribly burned.

Carson was picked up by a passing motorist and rushed to the Lowry hospital here, where physicians gave him but slight chance for recovery. This morning, however, young Carson showed some improvement and it was deemed advisable to transfer him to an Atlanta hospital.

Carson and his father had been living at Rydal during the progress of road work which he and his father, a well-known grading contractor of Atlanta, were engaged in. Young Carson and his bride of a year, formerly Miss Lucile McAfee, of Atlanta, were living at the home of W. D. McDaniel, Rydal.

Mr. Carson was well liked here and was said to have been popular in Atlanta's younger set. He was a graduate of Tech High school, Atlanta, and a former student at Georgia Tech, where he was a member of the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity.

WAVE OF BANDITRY SWEEPS OVER CITY

diately after entering the store and commanded the occupants to "stand by" and keep quiet. Mr. Whitlock stated that he was sure the man had something smeared on his face.

Two well-dressed young white bandits entered the grocery store of L. Edwards at 300 Marietta street late Saturday night, held up Lillie Norris, negro employee who was alone in the store at the time and escaped with about $15. The bandits escaped in a light touring car, Patrolmen Covington and Scott were told, but the license number was not secured as they turned out the lights as they sped off.

A lone white highwayman held up Milton Brooks, negro, who lives in an alleyway off Richardson street and robbed him of $27. Brooks was enroute home when the white man appeared suddenly from the darkness.

A negro, Sam Short, was the victim of a bandit's pistol on Stewart avenue near Dill avenue, as he was on his way home, he told Grady hospital attaches. He was shot in the leg and will recover, hospital attaches stated.

The home of Mrs. Sam Jankins, at 771 Washington street, was entered by burglars early Saturday night and a large quantity of clothing was taken, police were told.

William Hellman, of 535 Washington street, who operates a grocery at 735 Fraser street, was held up by three negroes shortly before closing time Saturday night and robbed of $15 in cash. As the negroes went out of the store they shot pistols and a shotgun several times, as a warning to Hellman not to follow. He didn't, but called a cab and went home, where he reported the affair to police and furnished a description of the trio.

Daughter Weds, King of Gypsies Gets Warrant

Washington, December 10.—(United News.)—King Emil Mitchell is a fighting man and when his authority is flouted it arouses all his fiery gypsy nature.

So, though the white man's court has set the seal of approval on his daughter's runaway marriage with a man outside her race, King Mitchell does not intend to give in without a struggle.

When his gypsy queen died some years ago, King Mitchell thought nothing of spending $18,000 on her funeral. He still retains the undertaker's bill and displays it proudly to doubters of his munificence.

But where his defiant daughter is concerned, the king shows a different side of his nature.

He obtained a warrant for her arrest on a charge that she had purloined a few hundred dollars in jewels that belonged to her stepmother, the new queen.

It was his final answer to the action of the princess flouting tribal authority by eloping with a husband of her own choosing, William Osborn, a young Washington man.

In juvenile court the king vehemently declared that his daughter had erred in fleeing with an American husband, marrying him in the American way and going to live at his home. It was incorrigibility, he said, and asked that she be returned again to her people.

He said she was only 16 when married, but when asked to prove it he could not produce the "age stick" which he had kept for each of his 16 children, carving a notch for each year. The judge freed Princess Julia.

Late last night there was a long council of war in the Pennsylvania avenue headquarters of the king, where Julia, with others of her nation, had long told fortunes and read head bumps of capital tourists. Tribe followers wanted King Emil to disown the princess, but he seemed reluctant to do this, as long as any other avenue lay open to convince her she was wrong.

So the warrant followed. The king hopes it will serve to humble his disobedient daughter and cause her to forsake her newly-found husband and return to her own people.

Plans of Flight To South Pole Related by Byrd

BY BOYD D. LEWIS.

Boston, December 10.—(United News.)—A man who conquered the Arctic and Atlantic by air sat in the study of his home here today and outlined to the United News plans for one of the most daring polar expeditions ever attempted.

Into the great uncharted Antarctic region of gales and week-long snowstorms, Commander Richard E. Byrd will take three airplanes on an expedition which will culminate in a dash for the pole by air.

Here, if a landing can be made by the huge three-motored plane Byrd will use, he will plant the Stars and Stripes at the exact opposite point to which he dropped an American flag when he flew over the north pole in 1926.

"That big blank on our maps fascinates me," said Byrd. "It represents approximately 4,000,000 miles of territory where the eye of man has never rested.

"I have long felt that science would gain by the meteorological data which is to be gained from this region. Thus I set about to interest men who would realize the value of this knowledge in a South Polar expedition. Edsel Ford, the National Geographic society and Robert W. Daniel, of New York and Virginia, became my principal backers.

"The assembling of a personnel for this expedition was no easy task. When plans are finally completed, about 50 to 60 men will board the ship which is to take us from New York to the ice barrier that marks the edge of the Antarctic continent.

Bennett and Noville Go.

"Floyd Bennett, who flew over the north pole with me, will be my lieutenant. I couldn't go without him. I'll always regret he couldn't make the trans-Atlantic trip because of injuries he received when the ship cracked up last spring.

"The primary object of this expedition is not adventure. It is the advancement of science. A dozen specialists will make the trips with us. Those will include a meteorologist, an ornithologist, an ichthyologist, a zoologist and a geologist."

Lieutenant G. O. Noville, who participated in both of Byrd's previous enterprises, will be an executive of the Antarctic expedition, as will Tom Mulroy, veteran engineer of the Chantier, which took Byrd and his men to the north pole base and back.

More than a dozen of the Arctic crew have been engaged for the new venture. Six Eskimos have been hired to make the trip.

"The Eskimos," Byrd explained, "will be useful in handling the dogs and in sewing skin clothing. There is no one who can sew furs with reindeer sinew like an Eskimo. And we'll need fur clothing. Arthur T. Walden, of Wonalancet, N. H., is now preparing an Eskimo-dog freight team. He will have charge of the 50 dogs we will take with us.

"We should finally get under way some time in August or September of next year. This of course will be spring in the Antarctic.

"The ship which must carry us through the vast fields of breaking ice must be a sturdy one. Several are under consideration but none has been chosen.

"It must be a roomy ship as well as a stout one as we've to carry three planes and about 10,000 gallons of gas, as well as supplies to last us through many months.

"We probably will go direct to the Ross ice barrier. Here where the ice forms a cliff hundreds of feet high, we will make our headquarters in the Bay of Whales. Most of our equipment will be unloaded here and though we may establish smaller camps, this will be the base of operations.

"There will be one large plane and two smaller ones, probably Bellancas of the type used by Clarence Chamberlin to cross the Atlantic."

Though Byrd said the large plane had not been selected, it is believed it will be a Ford tri-motor plane similar to the type now in use by the United States government.

All three plans will be constructed so that either pontoons or skis may be used in place of wheels. Skis were successfully employed by Byrd on his other polar plane.

Hopes to Land.

It is by the use of the skis that Byrd hopes to land at the pole. If he is successful in landing there the scientists he will carry with him will be able to make valuable observations and gain priceless data.

It will be no simple task to pilot aircraft in the Antarctic, Byrd said.

"The air on the central plateau which is about 10,000 feet above sea level, is extremely rare," he explained. "Planes will have to take off and land at much higher speeds than under ordinary atmospheric conditions.

"We may encounter storms which will force our plane down. Arctic snowstorms are more blinding that fog. But we will take ever precaution. We have several radio sending sets, small ones for the planes and a large station by which we hope to keep in touch with the outside world throughout our stay.

"Our intention is to stay through the summer and return, but if necessary, we shall remain at the Bay of Whales through the winter and resume our work in the following spring."

Irene Castle Is Champion Of Stray Dog

Chicago, December 10.—(AP)—Mrs. Frederic McLaughlin, the former Irene Castle, who recently opposed the use of tail sets on horses exhibited at a horse show here, today championed the cause of the stray dog.

"With the holiday spirit in the air and good-will in our hearts, let us not turn our backs on the unhappiest of creatures—the lost or homeless dog," pleaded Mrs. McLaughlin in a letter to the Tribune. "Take one home with you when chance throws him in your path. You will be rewarded by grateful devotion and companionship. I picked up a big mutt hound, or rather, he picked me up, on New Year's day last year and he has made a great pet."

Children Who Struck For Man Principal Are Losing Fight

Newport, Ore., December 10.—(United News.)—Striking students of the Newport High school have lost one week of education and the prospects of their being compensated for the loss by the appointment of a man principal is dimmer than ever.

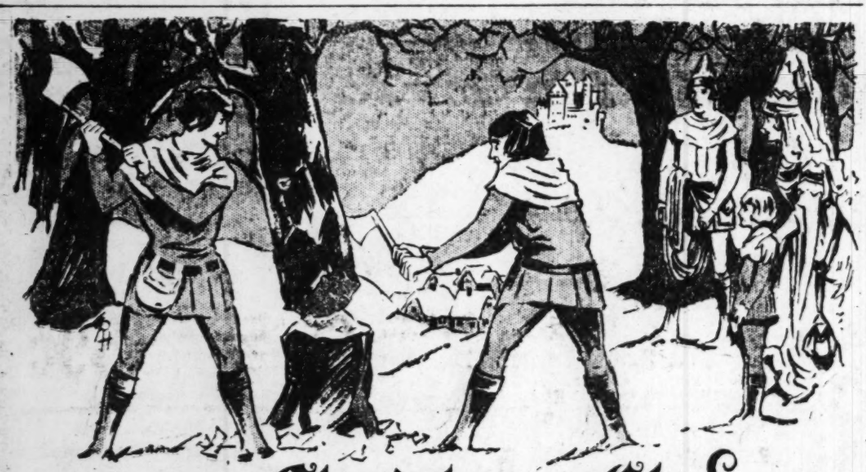

Only two of the 37 recalcitrant scholars who won the aid of their parents in a walk-out last Monday, because they objected to the edicts of a woman principal they proclaimed as "old fashioned," are back at their studies and they are in different schools. One went to the state of Washington and the other to Scio, near here, where, presumably, there are no women principals who wear long skirts or long hair.

Woman, 100, Recalls Speech

:: HAS NEVER SUFFERED FROM TOOTHACHE ::

Made by Abraham Lincoln

Rockford, Ill., December 10.—(AP)—Mrs. Minor P. Webster, 100 years old tomorrow, happy and healthful, thinks this age, bemoaned by some, is wonderful.

Mrs. Webster helps with the housework, makes patchwork quilts and listens to the radio. She never has had a toothache, nor has she been in a dentist's chair.

The centenarian has no code for longevity unless it be "common sense" living, which does not include idleness, but does include regular hours for eating and sleeping.

"My parents were Pennsylvania Dutch farmers," Mrs. Webster remarked. "There were 14 children in our family. We never had breakfast in bed, nor need for ice water after our parties."

She was born near Lebanon, Pa., and came to Illinois when she was 16.

In 1846 she drove several miles to hear a young, gaunt lawyer who was running for congress.

"He looked too young," she recalled, "and I didn't think he would be elected. He was. It was Abraham Lincoln."

ENTOMOLOGY CHECK RETURNED BY BANK

madge contained only his signature and not that of Neese.

Mr. Worsham said Talmadge did not use the method that had been in force in the bureau for several months. He said a rule was adopted by the board when Ira Williams retired as state entomologist which required the checks to be signed by the commissioner of agriculture and counter-signed by Mr. Neese. He exhibited canceled checks which bore the signature of J. J. Brown who preceded Mr. Talmadge as commissioner, and were countersigned on the end by W. L. Neese.

This was the rule which was changed by the board at its meeting Thursday, which now requires checks to be signed by an assistant secretary and treasurer and countersigned by the secretary of the board. At this meeting Mr. Neese was elected assistant secretary and treasury and under the rules checks must now be signed by him and countersigned by E. Lee Worsham, secretary of the board. Those voting for the rule were J. P. Hogg, Buena Vista, and Dr. Lyman Veeder, Cornelia, associate members of the board. Talmadge, who is the third member of the board and chairman, opposed the adoption of the rule, according to his statement.

Speer Stays Out.

State Treasurer Speer stated Saturday that he had no desire to be drawn into the controversy in any particular. He said he would hold the returned check for $3,044.76 until Monday to see if Mr. Neese will countersign it. He said if Mr. Neese declines to countersign the check he will return it to Mr. Talmadge and cancel the receipt he gave Mr. Talmadge for the money.

Following is the letter sent Mr. Worsham by the Fourth National bank, in stating that the bank would not honor any checks on bureau funds until an accord was reached:

"This is to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 9 instructing us that we are to continue to honor checks drawn by W. L. Neese, as assistant secretary and treasurer of the Georgia state board of entomology, on the special account carried in the name of the board at our bank.

"We have likewise received instructions from Mr. Eugene Talmadge, commissioner of agriculture and ex-officio chairman of the board, cancelling the signature of Mr. Neese.

"In view of this discrepancy in instructions, and the disagreement as to the authority of Mr. Neese to draw checks, this is to advise you that until your views are in accord, and we are furnished duly certified and acceptable legal authority for the disbursement of the funds in this account, that we will be obliged to return any checks drawn account of insufficient authority.

"In view of these circumstances, we very sincerely trust that no checks will be drawn on this account until these differences are adjusted."

Talmadge Statement.

Discussing the situation Saturday, Commissioner Talmadge made public the following statement.

"The Atlanta Constitution published in the statement this (Saturday) morning that 'the fight' in the board of entomology 'dates back to the time when the commissioner of agriculture assumed his new duties last June as successor to J. J. Brown. The two associate commissioners supported E. Lee Worsham, state entomologist, in his direction of the affairs of the board, while Worsham's policies were opposed by Commissioner Talmadge. The commissioner went on the floor of the legislature last summer in an effort to pass a bill which would virtually abolish the state board of entomology, but the legislature defeated this measure.'

"This publication is totally at variance with the facts, as is also the further statement in the same publication that 'the move of Commissioner Talmadge is made to obtain control of the department by that official in the face of any opposition vote the board may make against him.'

"The plain truth of the situation is that I opposed the selection of Mr. Worsham as state entomologist on the same grounds and for the same reason Governor Clifford Walker opposed it. Governor Walker had one meeting of the board of entomology, called for the purpose of electing Mr. Worsham etomologist, held up, and presented his reasons to that board for his opposition and appointed a new member of the board to take the place of the then holdover member. After the governor's departure from the state and during his absence another meeting of the board was called and Mr. Worsham was elected over the governor's protest. Though this occurred prior to the date for me to take office as the successor to Mr. Brown, I was invited to attend the meeting, was asked to approve the selection of Mr. Worsham and declined to do so.

Changes Urged.

"After going into office, and just about the time for the legislature to meet I recommended certain changes should be made by law in several of the subdivisions of the department of agriculture and in the entomological department. These recommendations were not original with me, particularly as pertain to the entomological department, but are identically the recommendations which for three years had been passed by the state auditor and emphasized. They stand as records today as they did at the time I coincided with Mr. Slate's ideas and asked that the legislature put them into effect. Mr. Worsham and Mr. Hogg worked the legislature against them, together with employees of the entomogolical department, and these gentlemen procured the introduction in the general assembly of a piece of crosslegislation, directly contrary to the recommendations of the state auditor, which I had adopted, in which they undertook to legislate entirely out of any connection with the entomogolical department the only official of the state elected by the people. It was that legislation and the lobby behind it which brought about the general assembly's 'refusal to pass' the important bills offered touching this department.

"These matters were preliminary to the situation which has now been brought about in the entomological department, a situation which is based solely upon the purpose and intention of circumventing the law of the state in the control of the funds and operations of the board of entomology, and the perpetuation of the same old machine methods of distribution of political patronage in the employment of attaches of this department.

Says It is Misleading.

"The newspaper publication Saturday morning, conveying the information of the deposit of fees collected by this department into the state treasury being affected by the new Neill law is totally misleading. The law which has been in effect all the while provides that these funds shall be deposited in the state treasury. That law has merely been complied with, and so am I endeavoring to comply with the provisions of the law governing the audit and approval before payment, of all bills for expense accounts and other expenditures from the funds of this department.

"The law creating the board of entomology provides for three members, one who is elected by the people and two to be appointed by the governor. It provides for a secretary and treasurer, who shall be the state entomologist. It does not provide for a vice chairman. It does not provide for an assistant treasurer, nor an assistant secretary. It does not give the two appointed members and the entomologist or any other authority in the state whatever, except the general assembly, the right or the authority to 'disqualify' the commissioner of agriculture as exoffice chairman or to relieve him of his duty in safeguarding the funds of the state, allotted to that department, from the plunder-bound of politics.

"I am obeying the law as it is written, and as it stands. I am keeping faith with the people of Georgia who elected me to wipe out the spoils system in the department of agriculture and its subdivisions. These two things I am going to continue to do as long as I am in office."

Sharply Rising Mercury, Rain Seen for Today

Another substantial temperature rise will enable Atlantans to spend a large portion of the Sabbath in the open air without fear of frost-bitten fingers and toes. This was indicated in official weather reports for today which also call for unsettled atmospheric conditions with cloudy skies and probable rains late in the afternoon, according to C. F. von Herrmann, local met orologist.

The maximum temperature today will probably reach 55 degrees, after starting at the 38-degree mark, the weatherman said. Saturday's range covered thermometer registration between 26 and 48 degrees. No variation in forecast is expected for the state generally.

PEACE IS SEEN IN POLAND-LITHUANIA

declares that all Polish nationals now in Lithuania will be permitted to return to Poland.

The two dictators, Pilsudski in a business suit and Voldemaras in a long-tailed morning coat, heard the resolution quietly.

Little War Is Over.

Two weeks ago they were on the verge of declaring war with each other.

The resolution meant that another little war, that might have developed into another world one, had come formally to an end over the league council table.

The beginning of the end came abruptly at a morning conference today when Field Marshal Pilsudski, with soldierly bluntness, leaned across to Voldemaras and said suddenly:

"Peace or War."

"What is it? It is peace or war? Do you want peace?"

Voldemaras, astounded, hesitated for a long moment. Then he replied:

"We want peace."

"In that case," Pilsudski said, "I have nothing more to do here. My foreign minister, Zaleski, will complete the negotiations. I shall return to Warsaw—and order te deums of thanksgiving to be sung in all Polish churches."

Much remained still to be done to restore really normal relations between Poland and Lithuania. But council members felt they had removed to the sphere of purely political controversy what had threatened many times in the last seven years to precipitate a disastrous war.

Satisfied with the progress being made over the negotiations, the principal council members turned to other diplomatic questions. It was understood that at a luncheon to be given Sunday by Sir Austen Chamberlain, of Great Britain, to the French foreign minister, Aristide Briand, the possibility of a conference among Chamberlain, Briand and Premier Benito Mussolini, of Italy, would be discussed. Sir Ronald Graham, British ambassador to Italy, was to be present at the luncheon. It was hoped that a conference between Briand and Mussolini might remove some of the misunderstanding occasioned by the recent negotiation of French-Jugo Slavian and Italian-Albanian treaties.

GRIDIRON CLUB GIRLS WOULD BE PRESIDENTS

Julius Coolidge he must take back the crown."

Flavias returned battered, sore and dishevelled.

"Did you crown Julius Coolidge?"

"No, he crowned me!" moaned Fess—a play on the president's recent rebuke to Senator Fess for advocating Coolidge's renomination.

"Then only one thing remains," the senators decided. "A free and unbossed convention must offer the crown where it will. We must await the ides of June!"

Farm relief was another subject that sizzled.

Miss Aggie Culture, in pain and crying for relief, was attended by the eminent specialists, Doctors Brookhart, McNary, Borah, Jardine and Capper. She explained she was suffering from low market pressure, a bad case of taxities and a dislocated tariff.

Dr. Borah recommended "debenture pills," but Dr. McNary pronounced them "all bunk" and suggested instead some "equalization fee tonic." Dr. Jardine counselled her to throw away both remedies and turn to his "wonderful stabilization compound."

Miss Aggie was asked if she had tried Dr. Coolidge.

"No, No, No!" she answered excitedly.

"Poor Mary Haugen went to him and you know what happened to her—Dr. Coolidge performed a veto operation and she's never been the same since."

She sniffed at Dr. Hoover as a "faith healer," saying he tried to cure her of war depression and she'd had fits ever since.

Mayor "Bill" Thompson's anti-British crusade was the subject of another skit, in which it was suggested that the constitution ought to be burned because it was in English.

The club poked good natured fun at Senator Jim Reed, Governor Smith and Governor Ritchie; and used a parody of the "The Two Black Crows" as a vehicle for railing at Senator Smith, Senator Vare and Samuel Insull, of Chicago. The Fall-Sinclair case was parodied in another skit.

Among those present were three trans-oceanic fliers, Charles A. Lindbergh, Commander R. E. Byrd and Lieutenant Francis W. G. Maitland; Senator Curtis, Vice President Dawes, Secretary Hoover, Senator Willis, of Ohio; former Governor Lowden, of Illinois; former Secretary of Agriculture Meredith; Governor Ritchie, of Maryland; Senator Reed, of Missouri; Senator Walsh, of Montana, and John W. Davis.

BROWN NAMED HEAD OF GRIDIRON CLUB.

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Harry J. Brown, correspondent of the Boise Statesman, Salt Lake Tribune and Spokane Spokesman-Review, today was elected president of the Gridiron club, an organization of Washington newspapermen. He succeeds Ashmun N. Brown, of the Providence Journal.

Edgar Markham, of the St. Paul Dispatch and Pioneer Press, was elected to membership.

it was impossible for a man's body to pass between the car and the side of the elevator shaft, and no explanation as to how he fell off the car could be given, as the door at the second floor was closed when his lifeless body was found.

His body was considerably mangled when it struck the side of the shaft as it descended.

Screams from the customer and the thud of Duncan's body striking the bottom of the shaft atracted the attention of other employees of the building. The body was removed to the undertaking parlors of Harry G. Poole, where an inquest will be held during the day.

Mr. Duncan is survived by his widow; father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Duncan, Sr., of Florida; six sisters, Mrs. Myrtice Young, Mrs. Gene Rickerson, Mrs. Elbert Rickerson and Mrs. Dave Day, of Broxton, Ga.; Mrs. Albert Hooten, of Griffin, Ga., and Mrs. Wilbur Mix, of Oxford, Fla., and five brothers Everett Duncan, of Atlanta; Grover Duncan and Morris Duncan, of Broxton, Ga.; Willie Duncan, of Miami, Fla., and Lump Duncan, of Oxford, Fla.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

LEGION DRY POLL IS OPPOSED HERE

I have wired the Georgia department adjutant, Joe M. Carr, of Rome, who is in Indianapolis, my views and that I absolutely oppose the poll."

Mr. Candler said that business matters might keep him from attending the conference this year, but that Georgia's attitude would be correctly presented to the conference by Adjutant Carr.

In asserting that he could consider the request by Spafford nothing other than a political move, Mr. Kempton said that the suggestion was most untimely, coming from a newly inaugurated commander who hailed from New York state.

"A poll such as suggested might be perfectly proper for the Literary Digest," he asserted, "but it is untimely from the head of the American Legion, which keeps entirely away from religious and political subjects in all its meetings and actions, and it certainly should not be undertaken by the legion or by the legion's monthly magazine."

LEGION CHIEF URGED TO HALT POLL.

Spokane, Wash., December 10.—(AP)—Declaring that Edward E. Spafford, national commander of the American Legion, acted without authority in announcing a national poll by legion and auxiliary posts on the prohibition question, General James A. Drain, past national commander of the veterans' organization, today called upon Spafford to stop the poll.

General Drain sent a telegram to Commander Spafford telling him point blank that the chief of the legion has no power to direct or suggest a poll "upon a highly controversial national political question."

"A public statement of correction" was demanded of Commander Spafford for "proposing to do something for which you had no authority."

Detrimental to League.

General Drain declared publication of the announcement that Spafford was sponsoring the poll "has been and is detrimental to the mighty influence of the legion as a nonpartisan and public spirited organization."

Such action as proposed by the commander could be authorized only by the national convention of the legion, General Drain asserted.

"We must not forget," he said in the telegram, "that the legion consists of over 700,000 men, associated in common to serve God and country in peace with the spirit which moved them for service in war."

General Drain's Views.

The power of the organization for good, he added, depended upon whether its acts represented the will of the majority, expressed through regular legal and representative channels.

"The immediate question," General Drain continued, "is not whether the amendment (18th) and the law (Volstead) are right or whether the American Legion is for or against the amendment and the law, or whether it is right or expedient for the legion to hold a poll upon the subject, but simply whether a national commander has a right to direct or even to suggest a poll upon a highly controversial national political question on which the authoritative voice of the whole legion, namely a national convention, has not been heard.

"Upon this point of the commander's power there can be no question. He does not have the power."

HOT SPRINGS POST OPPOSED TO POLL.

Hot Springs, Ark., December 10.—(AP)—The proposal of National Commander Edward E. Spafford for a national poll of the membership of the American Legion and its auxiliary on the prohibition question found added opposition today from the Hot Springs post of the legion.

The Warren Townsend post adopted a resolution notifying the national department that it opposed Spafford's plan.

Commander Clem B. Wilson said legionnaires here felt political controversies should be avoided by the legion as a patriotic organization.

John C. Pipkin, commander of the Arkansas division of the legion, said at Little Rock last night that Spafford exceeded his authority in announcing the poll. O. L. Bodenhammer, El Dorado national executive committeeman, shared the state commander's view that the poll is ill-advised.

SPAFFORD STATEMENT CONDEMNED IN SPOKANE.

Des Moines, Iowa, December 10.—(AP)—Officers of the Iowa department of the American Legion today condemned a statement recently made by National Commander Spafford announcing that a poll would be taken on the legion's attitude toward prohibition.

G. Decker French, of Davenport, commander of the Iowa department, in declaring that Mr. Spafford's statement was not authorized by any convention of the legion or its national executive council, stated that he would not permit a prohibition referendum to be taken in Iowa unless "instructed by proper authority."

Volney Diltz, of Des Moines, national executive committeeman, stated that a controversy over prohibition is outside the domain of legion activity as an organization. He expressed the opinion that the poll will not be taken.

SPAFFORD IS SILENT ON DRAIN'S DEMAND.

Uniontown, Pa., December 10.—(AP) Edward E. Spafford, national commander of the American Legion said late today that he had no reply to make at present to the demand of General James A. Drain, past national commander of the legion, that Spafford withdraw his request for a national poll of legion posts on the prohibition question.

DODGE CALLS REMUS "LIAR AND CAD"

fore his face prove to the jury that when he said there was anything except strict business relations between Mrs. Remus and myself he lied."

Dodge, a bulky six footer with bold, staring brown eyes and a heavy set jaw, fairly snarled the last sentence between clinched teeth. Piquant Ruth Remus, the winsome school girl orphaned when the king of bootleggers killed her mother, Queen Imogene, stood nearby nodding her approval.

"Remus today knows in his heart how she remained loyal to him even in his darkest moments. He knows, too, that business deals of which he was cognizant were the only things that ever brought Mrs. Remus and myself together.

"The state is beginning to show now how false Remus' charges are and how cold blooded his murder was," the former dry agent concluded, in referring to gains the state made today.

Remus' Pal Indicted.

Prosecutor Taft discomfited the defense when he hauled John S. Berger, millionaire, and Remus' star witness, from his luxurious suite at a local hotel. Berger, arrested as a result of his testimony for old pal, George Remus, was released on $50,000 bail.

"I've been expecting this," said Berger. "And I'm going to sue Prosecutor Taft, who signed the indictment, for $500,000 damages to my character. His case is so weak he is deliberately intimidating me because I testified for George Remus."

The prosecution insists Berger perjured himself when he said he had never been an inmate of a penal institution. The indictment also calls Berger's statement that he at no time demanded $25,000 from Mrs. Remus "malicious perjury." The prosecution says Berger threatened the slain woman with violence when she refused to hand him that sum.

Prosecutor Taft laughed at the possibility of his being sued for damages by Berger.

Woman's Story Unchanged.

Although Remus, coaching in a hoarse whisper from his chair, and his counsel, Charles H. Elston, centered a hot cross fire today on Mrs. Elizabeth Felix, southern gentlewoman, they failed to shake her story that slain Imogene Remus was a loyal and faithful wife.

Carefully weighing her soft, drawled answers, Mrs. Felix, wearing a chic beige hat and dress, proved an ace for the state in its attempt to send George Remus to the chair.

During the four long weeks that this momentous murder trial has dragged on nobody has made a more favorable impression in the witness box than the little Alabama woman. She successfully prevented the defense showing that the relations of Dodge and Mrs. Remus were ever anything but formal.

Q—Did you ever hear her call Dodge "daddy?"

A—No, she never called anyone "daddy" except Mr. Remus.

Q—Did you ever hear her call him Franklin?

A—No.

Elston and Assistant Prosecutor Bassler fought bitterly while this cross-examination was going on, but Elston finally had to give up any attempt to impeach the testimony of the little housewife who was so obviously convincing the jurors she was telling the truth.

Jean and Catherine Buchanan, who left Janesville, Wis., as poor girls, to visit relatives in England, have returned to their home with $150,000, a trust fund settled upon them by Baron Woolavington, their granduncle, a British whisky manufacturer. They are shown above. Below is a view of their home in Janesville, and inset, a sketch of the baron. Their grandfather, the baron's brother, came to Janesville as a remittance man.

FATHER WHO SOLD HIS TWO DAUGHTERS IS BARRED VISITS

Chicago, December 10.—(AP)—A father's act in "selling" his two daughters to their mother has deprived him of any rights as a parent and a writ of injunction restraining him from visiting the children was issued the mother today.

The strange case involved Dr. Walfather of the children in return for his wife's agreement to waive claims of $1,725 due her in alimony.

Lately he had been seeing the daughters, the mother, Mrs. Edna Wimmer, said, so she went to court to enjoin him from further meetings.

The dentist pleaded for leniency during the Christmas holidays, but it was denied.

Congress Urged To Pass Alien Property Bill

Buffalo, N. Y., December 10.—(AP)—Urging adoption of the alien property bill now before congress, Undersecretary Ogden Mills, of the treasury, declared tonight in an address before the Buffalo club that it would permit the government to avoid confiscation of private property in violation of the country's tradition and of sound public morality.

Admitting the measure did not offer an ideal solution of the war-seized German property, he declared that "given all circumstances, political and otherwise, I believe it to be the best that can be obtained."

"If this bill becomes law," the undersecretary added, "the German property owners will receive almost $200,000,000 at an early date. The German ship, patent and radio owners will receive in cash, as soon as their awards are determined, 50 per cent of the amount due them.

"The American claimants should receive, within the course of the next year or two, no less than $113,000,000, while the 391 death and personal injury claims and the claims under $100,000 will be paid almost immediately."

FRANCE VOTES AIR MAIL LINE; PARIS TO BUENOS AIRES

Paris, December 10.—(AP)—Credits for an air mail line from Paris to Buenos Aires via Dakar, West Africa, were voted 400 to 125 in parliament today.

Maurice Bokanowski, minister of commerce, informed the chamber of deputies the line would begin operation in January or February.

NEW "DIVING BOMB" EXPECTED TO PROVE REVOLUTIONIZING

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Successful experiments with a new explosive known as the "diving bomb" which, it was said, may revolutionize future naval warfare, are announced by the navy bureau of aeronautics.

Rear Admiral Moffett, chief of the bureau, disclosed that the experiments had been carried on in secrecy and that the results would be guarded with the utmost care.

New Highway No. 28 to Open Beauty of Mountain Section

Opening of a new scenic fairyland in the Georgia-North Carolina section lying around Clayton, Ga., Highlands, Hayesville and High Hampton will come with the completion of the North Carolina extension of highway No. 28 from a point near Sapphire to the Georgia-Carolina line near Murphy, according to a descriptive story of that section appearing in the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer.

Some astounding road work is being done on this highway which includes the blasting of one-half a mile of road through solid granite. The extension arrives at famous Cullasaja river gorge, 12 miles east of Franklin, and when it is blasted through the rock to the top of this gorge it will reach a scenic section hitherto unavailable over good roads and which will open up this entire scenic territory covering hundreds of square miles to visitors from all points in the Carolinas and Georgia.

This new territory has close to its center Highlands and Franklin in North Carolina and stretches out in rare beauty for many miles toward the center of North Carolina and toward the north Georgia mountain section lying just north of Atlanta. When the new road is completed by the North Carolina highway department it will make this territory available for Atlanta motorists in six hours. About the same time will be required to reach the section from Charlotte.

Big Development.

In and around Highlands preparations are being made for a big development, particularly in hotels and summer cottages and the completion of the new highway is expected to open up in this territory the most beautiful scenery east of the Rocky Mountains.

At Highlands, Scott Hudson, of Atlanta, is completing a new golf course located on a tract of 100 acres adjoining the town. The course is being finished under the direction of Donald Ross and will be one of the most beautiful in the south with many unique features found in no other course. Nine holes of the course lie along a lake now on this property, while the other holes leading off from the clubhouse extends to the shore of Municipal lake. The clubhouse itself is of unusual beauty. It has 32 rooms each with bath. Highway No. 28 passes along the side of this lake.

The new paradise can be reached conveniently by Atlanta and Georgia motorists over the road that goes by Gainesville, Cornelia and Tallulah Falls to Clayton, thence to Franklin or can be reached by the road which runs by Gainesville to Neel's Gap and thense to Murphy, N. C.

Beauty Described.

Describing the beauty of the new gorge, which will be skirted by the No. 28 extension, the article declares:

"Going through this gorge the traveler must feel that the world is closing in around him in awesome manner, but then, eastward-bound out of Highlands, he will come suddenly into one of the broadest patches of daylight he could desire. It is the panonama from No. 28, knokn as 'Sunset View,' which probably covers a larger scope of mountain lands than any other spot in the state. More impressive, even than the piled up masses of ridge and peaks, is the tremendous recesses of the valley bowl, for the trees recede into actually shadowy depths. Up one slope the houses of the villages of Glenville and Cashiers shine white in the sunlight; Chimney Top overshadows High Hampton and in the foreground the great bulk of Whitesides mountain, with its towering granite corner known as the Devil's Courthouse looms high into the sky and hard-by the Wild Cat cliffs exposed in all their nakedness. From the northern to the southern end of the curving outline of mountain ridge is a distance of an old-time horseback journey of 100 miles.

"Very much of mountain wildness is encountered between Franklin and Hayesville, the immediate objective point of the road builders, and the latter place having been reached, Highway No. 28 will be opened to Murphy, where it joins the neighbor it left at Bat Cave, to completion of a scenic circle that is going to make North Carolina as well known to the traveling public as is the Garden of the Gods, or any one of the National parks 'out west.'"

COLONIAL TRUST AUDIT ALLOWED BY JUDGE

An order authorizing defense counsel for J. S. Slicer, president, and T. J. Norman, vice president and treasurer of the defunct Colonial Trust company, under indictment in connection with the failure of the company last September, to examine all of the books, records and documents for the purpose of making an audit, was signed Saturday by Judge Virlyn B. Moore in Fulton superior court.

Trial of the officials has been postponed until the February term of court upon request of defense council who wished additional time to prepare an audit. The state has finished with its investigation and has announced ready for trial.

The order authorizes James C. Williams, liquidating agent of the Colonial Trust company to allow the defense attorneys to see the books, records and documents, but prevents the attorneys from removing them from the offices of the liquidating agent at the trust company, 37 Poplar street.

The state will be represented by Assistant Solicitor John H. Hudson and the bank officials by the law firms of Hewlett and Dennis and Colquit and Conyers.

ANTHONY SALON, NEW HAIR-DRESSING COMPANY, OPENS

Recent opening of the Anthony Permanent Waving salon in suite 519 Wynne-Claughton building, brings to the women of Atlanta the services of the well-known Blanchard Anthony, expert hair dresser, formerly of Birmingham. Blanchard Anthony, considered one of the most skillful and successful waving technicians in the entire south, is a graduate of the C. Nestle school of permanent waving. His salon is equipped with the latest waving equipment and Mr. Anthony states that he is prepared to offer a complete waving service at all times.

Equipped with the Text-o-meter, the Anthony Permanent Waving salon has the distinction of being the first shop in the south with this widely-heralded machine. The Text-o-meter, Mr. Anthony stated, is a superdelicate machine used for testing hair to determine by scientific methods the kind of solution to which each individual type of hair should be subjected in producing the wave.

THE CONSTITUTION AIDS IN FINDING VETERAN'S HEIR

Government compensation due the family of a deceased world war veteran will be secured the veteran's heirs through an article recently published in The Constitution at instance of the Atlanta chapter, American Red Cross, seeking to locate the widow of William Ramy, it was learned from chapter headquarters Saturday.

An extract from the Red Cross communication to The Constitution follows:

"We are writing to thank you for assisting us with locating the remarried widow of William Ramy, a deceased world war veteran. We are sure it will be gratifying to you to know that Mrs. Colley has a son who is entitled to compensation from the government, but he has been lost to the government for seven years. Through your assistance in locating this family we feel that we will be able to get for this boy what is due him through his father's world war service."

OFFICERS CLEARED OF LATE CHARGE IN HOWARD'S COURT

Two city policemen were arraigned before Judge G. H. Howard in Fulton superior court Saturday morning for failure to appear as witnesses in a case before the judge during the past week, but were exonerated when the officers told the court that they had not been served with subpoenas.

The officers, L. J. Brooks and J. R. Pittman, were accompanied to the court by Captain G. T. Butler, Lieutenant J. A. Hollis and O. H. Pendy, secretary to Police Chief James L. Beavers.

A lengthy conference between the officers and Judge Howard ensued, the court pointing out that it had become necessary to assess fines on a number of city policemen because they had failed to appear in court.

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

VOL. LX., No. 179 — ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING, DECEMBER 11, 1927.

Insurgents Given Choice Committee Places in Senate

Senator Gerald Nye Made Chairman of Public Lands, and Norbeck of Banking, Currency.

FRAZIER ASSIGNED TO INDIAN AFFAIRS

Senator Borah Retains Place as Head of Foreign Relations, and Norris of Judiciary.

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Additional republican irregulars from western states were assigned to important senate committee chairmanships today by the republican committee on committees after the declaration of truce between senators of this group and of the Old Guard on the question of senate organization.

Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota, one of the youngest senators, both in point of age and of service, was given the chairmanship of the public lands committee, and Peter Norbeck, of South Dakota, succeeded to the chairmanship of the powerful banking and currency committee.

Big Posts Given.

Lynn J. Frazier, of North Dakota, was assigned to the Indian affairs committee, and Robert B. Howell, of Nebraska, was elevated to the chairmanship of the claims committee.

Besides these senators, others of the irregulars who have chairmanships of important committees are:

Borah, of Idaho, foreign relations.
Norris, of Nebraska, judiciary.
Couzens, of Michigan, education and labor.
McNary, of Oregon, agriculture.
Johnson, of California, immigraton.

Must Have Approval.

The assignments of Nye, Norbeck, Frazier and Howell have yet to be approved by the senate, but there is little doubt that the recommendations of the majority committee on committees will be accepted as the democrats have disclaimed any intention of seeking to take control of the standing committees.

The chairmanships of the banking and public lands committees were the chief ones in controversy before the committee or committees, and the irregulars were able to obtain both chairmanships because Norbeck declined to become chairman of the lands committee and insisted upon having the banking committee place. Nye was the last republican in rank on the lands committee with Smoot.

LIBRARY REPORT REVEALS GROWTH

110,229 More Books Loaned for Year Than 1926; Quarters Being Outgrown, Report Asserts.

Carnegie library, of Atlanta, has a circulation of 800,755 books for home use to its active membership of 70,309, and during the past year 110,229 more books were loaned than in 1926, according to the annual report of the library which has been submitted to Mayor I. N. Ragsdale by Miss Tommie Dora Barker, librarian.

Twenty-five years ago, on March 4, 1902, the Carnegie library of Atlanta began to give book service from its main library building and the library immediately took its rightful place in the community as the source of inspiration, information, and recreation in so far as they are to be found in books.

Authority of Special Senate Committee To Call Mexican Consular Officers Is Challenged.

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—A flock of subpoenas were reported to have been issued today by the special senate committee authorized to investigate charges in the Hearst newspapers that President Calles provided a fund of $1,200,000 for four United States senators.

Both the identity and the number of persons for whom summonses went out were withheld by the committee, Senator Reed, republican, Pennsylvania, chairman and author of the resolution of inquiry, explaining that the members had agreed among themselves not to discuss the matter in any way.

Every inquiry, even that going into the question of the authority of the committee to summon diplomatic or consular officers of the Mexican government, was met by the chairman and other members with the same

TROLLINGER AGAIN ON TRIAL MONDAY

Defendant Faces Second Murder Trial in Twelve Days; Charged With Allen Slaying.

Thomas Trollinger, Simpson road "death farm" tenant, will face trial for his life for the second time during the past 12 days on a charge of murder on Monday morning before Judge G. H. Howard in Fulton superior court.

He is charged with murdering Millard T. Allen, of a Simpson road address, who was shot and instantly killed on Sunday afternoon, October 23, at the "death farm."

Acquitted on December 1, when a jury returned a verdict of not guilty to an indictment charging him with the murder of Owen Carruthers, negro, whose body was unearthed in a corn field on the farm several weeks ago, Trollinger will have to face another jury on a similar charge Monday morning.

The defendant is alleged to have interceded in an argument between Allen and Miss Nina Evitt when Allen is said to have been threatening her life and Trollinger resented it. The man who was slain, it is averred, advanced upon Trollinger with a drawn knife and Trollinger shot him.

A warrant charging Trollinger with Allen's murder was sworn out in municipal court and following the preliminary hearing, Trollinger was exonerated of the charge and the warrant was dismissed by Judge J. B. Ridley.

According to the testimony at this hearing by three witnesses for the state, Trollinger acted in self-defense and Judge Ridley dismissed the warrant without forcing the defense to place a single witness on the stand.

After the finding of the body of Owen Carruthers, negro, buried in a corn field at the farm, the solicitor ordered another investigation into the Allen case with the result that Trollinger was indicted for the murders of the negro and also of Allen.

Attorneys F. Joe Turner and Len B. Guillebeau will represent the defendant at the trial and Solicitor General John A. Boykin and Assistant Solicitor John H. Hudson will prosecute the case for the state.

Atlanta Can Aid This Helpless Family All During Coming Year

:: THE CONSTITUTION'S "TEN OPPORTUNITIES" MAKE XMAS LAST 12 MONTHS ::

BY BILL SHIPPEN.

Opportunity knocks this morning at the doors of Atlanta and Georgia.

In Atlanta today live ten fatherless families whose needs have been adjudged more urgent than all the rest. The Atlanta Family Welfare society has selected these ten families for The Constitution's "Ten Opportunities" for 1927, ten opportunities for the people of Atlanta and former Atlantans in Georgia and the south to bring Christmas to these worthy but unfortunate citizens of this city, not only during the Christmas season, but every day in the entire year of 1928 as well.

These ten families have been selected out of 2,000 cases under the care of the Family Welfare society as the most worthy of your generosity.

By this appeal it is hoped to provide them with the necessities of life, that they may ward off sickness, ignorance, poverty and death during the coming year.

"TEN OPPORTUNITIES" OPEN TO YOU.

The "Opportunities," ten of them, are open to you. Their need is urgent and immediate. Your contribution, of whatever size, is solicited. Every penny sent to the "Ten Opportunities Editor," in care of The Constitution, will go to the Family Welfare society to be directly administered to the "Opportunity" specified by the benefactor.

During the coming year the Family Welfare society will keep accurate check on disbursements. When an individual, organization or group elects to sponsor an opportunity, social workers will make regular reports to the donor—an absorbing story of the development and growth of the separate charges.

The struggle for existence daunts the strongest at times. But these families, every one, lack a man to battle for them. They, as women and children of the poor, deserve protection and shelter.

Each of the little families is mothered by a woman capable of administering her home for the best interests of all, could she but have the small sum necessary for the task.

FIFTY LITTLE ONES LOOK TO MOTHER.

Fifty children are looking to these ten mothers for support, and only one of the youngsters is old enough to earn a wage. Several of the mothers are working in factories, none of them make more than $10 a week. Others are threatened by tuberculosis, the remainder hampered in their efforts at self-support by the very young.

This is more than a Christmas appeal, although it is voiced at a time when the spirit of generosity is most impelling—it is an effort to insure these opportunity families the necessities of life throughout the coming year.

In years past these ten opportunities have been taken by individuals, groups of employees of Atlanta firms, civic and fraternal organizations and Sunday school classes. This charity has helped many families to their feet, enabling mothers to bring up healthy, happy children. All have proved a credit to the community.

Atlanta is given this Sabbath morning, and for nine days to come, these "Ten Opportunities" to relieve suffering and want of ten worthy families.

They woefully need a dry roof overhead, sound walls to turn winter winds from frail bodies, clothing that they may go abroad unashamed, fuel for dark fireplaces and nutritious food to build resistance against the dread white plague.

Today, in the midst of plenty, they lack these things. And the holiday season, so joyously anticipated, will be the merrier for those Atlantans who will help to light the dark places of a human heart.

Last year at this time employees of The Constitution took over one opportunity to sponsor throughout 1927. After a year of healthful food and pleasant surroundings, this particular family, as strikingly displayed by a late photograph, showed every evidence of a normal, happy life. The mother was smiling and apparently rid of the tuberculosis which threatened her, and the children were all making good at school. One of the lads had become a Boy Scout, and was doing work on the side, while the eldest girl had obtained work as a stenographer. The family today is self-supporting.

DO IT NOW! TODAY! TAKE THIS OPPORTUNITY!

Many families menaced by tuberculosis, that terror which walks hand-in-hand with poverty, have been restored to health by funds raised through The Constitution's "ten opportunities," and countless others are supported by their own bread-winners today because a helping hand was reached to guide through days of darkness and pain.

Don't let that generous impulse congeal. Delay may deprive these worthy charities of your friendly support, and you of the joy in unselfish giving. Send your check, whatever its size, to The Constitution. Your name will not be used if you prefer not to have it.

Opportunity No. 1 is open to you.

Golden lights, gleaming ruby lights, twinkling emerald lights heralding a city's joy at the Christmas season—and every one reflected in the eyes of Atlanta's children, who eagerly look to that merriest of all holidays.

But there is one among the very young who sees it all through a blur.

The younger member of the "Opportunity No. 1" family walks in the shadow of lights down a dim corridor of his own.

A clumsy fellow, his schoolmates said. Clumsy, and stupid, too, they thought, listening as he recited his reading lesson. They did not know the lines swam giddily under his eyes; they could not guess he bumped his head at play on objects that somehow seemed far away.

TRAGEDY STEALS INTO THIS HOME.

Tragedy stole into this lad's home a year ago—but he could not know at first; instead, he and his brother listened eagerly while their father talked of riches they were soon to know.

The two boys could not understand why mother and big sister wept so. To his young sons the father was a great man, and they doted on his words—that was before the father was removed to the state insane asylum at Milledgeville.

The mother is frail and constantly under the care of a charity clinic. The oldest child, a girl, is enrolled at Junior High school. Immature for a wage earner, yet she is making progress with her studies.

This family is totally dependent. With better housing and a nutritious diet, the children can win to normal weight. With proper ocular attention the eldest boy and his brother will make better marks at school. The mother is despondent, but capable of carrying on if supplied with necessities that make for normal, healthy growth in her little ones.

$455 IS NEEDED FOR THIS FAMILY.

Three-seventy-five a week will pay the rent on a livable home, the Family Welfare society says. And $5 a week will be sufficient to supplement the amount furnished them for food. The yearly total required to enable this mother to raise her children as self-respecting members of society is $455. This is the "First Opportunity."

All checks sent to the "Ten Opportunities" Editor, care The Constitution, Atlanta, Ga., for "Opportunity No. 1" will go toward this family. Or will some Atlantan, or some Atlanta firm or organization or group take this entire "Opportunity No. 1" and immediately assure that this worthy family will be taken care of all during 1928?

This is your first opportunity.

LINDBERGH PLANS NON-STOP FLIGHT

Two Routes Are Announced for Proposed Trip of Atlantic Flier to Mexico City.

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh's flight to Mexico City will be of the non-stop variety, if weather conditions permit. This announcement was made tonight by Major Harvey S. Burwell, commandant of Bolling field, who is collaborating with the trans-Atlantic flier in formulating plans for the expedition.

Two routes are being contemplated, Major Burwell said, one for use should flying conditions be good, and the other if he should face headwinds or other adverse air conditions.

Should Colonel Lindbergh find conditions suitable he will take a direct compass route from Washington, speeding over Fredericksburg, Roanoke and Bristol, Va., Knoxville, Englewood and Chattanooga, Tenn., the northwest corner of Georgia and northern Alabama to Jackson, Miss.

Jackson probably would be reached about nightfall, and he might point for the Gulf of Mexico from that point or fly further westward over Lake Charles, La., to Galveston and thence to Point Isabel, near Brownsville, Texas.

At Point Isabel he would turn down the gulf coast to Tampico and thence across the state of Hidalgo to Mexico City.

His bad weather route, as outlined by Major Burwell, would avoid the southern Appalachian mountains and take him from Roanoke over western North Carolina to Atlanta and thence to Montgomery, where he would point for the Gulf of Mexico at Mobile probably following the coast lines to Tampico.

Life History Of Girl Bank Robber Shown

Mother of Rebecca Bradley Described as "Hysterical Woman."

La Grange, Texas, December 10.—(United News.)—Rebecca Bradley Rogers' life history was spread before a jury today at her trial for the robbery of the Farmers' National bank at Buda, Texas, a year ago.

Defense counsel was in the midst of portraying the history of the pretty University of Texas graduate when Judge M. C. Jeffrey adjourned court until Monday morning. Presentation of defense testimony began this afternoon when the state rested after Sheriff George Allen's story of the girl's arrest.

The largest crowd since the trial opened was present today. Necks were craned forward when Erskine Williams, Fort Worth, friend of the Bradley family, displayed a copy of the divorce decree obtained by Rebecca's mother from her father. Judge Jeffrey ruled the decree immaterial and its contents were not made known.

If the spectators were disappointed in that, they heard other interesting testimony. Mrs. Ruth and Irene Gafford told how Rebecca, in the absence of Charles Ramsdell, head of the Texas Historical association, once hired 28 clerks to write letters soliciting membership in the society. The letters were sent to persons listed in "Who's Who" and to university students, Daughters of the Confederacy and to movie actors.

Irene Gafford said Becky seemed pleased when movie people responded and joined the society. The two sisters also testified Becky overpaid them with checks that later were returned unhonored by the bank. The Historical society incident apparently was presented as adverse "character testimony."

The testimony presented by the de-

STATESMEN GIVE EUROPE WARNING

Hundred Torches of Revenge Ready to Set Off Powder Barrel. Foch Sets 1935 for Conflict.

BY PIERRE VAN PAASSEN.

(Copyright, 1927, for The Constitution.)

Paris, December 10.—Six of the foremost Europeans, men of entirely different and even conflicting aims and conceptions in life, have on various occasions recently sent out a solemn warning to the peoples of the world that the present state of armed peace on the continent will inevitably lead to a new and far more disastrous war than the last one. They declare there are a hundred torches of revenge ready to be flung into the European powder barrel.

One of the six, Marshal Ferdinand Foch, generalissimo of the allied armies during the latter part of the great war and at no time of his career considered an alarmist, has said quite frankly that in his estimation a new conflict will break out around the year 1935. Leon Daudet, famous editor, thinks the day of "an invasion from the east" will come even earlier for France. It will be recalled that Daudet foretold in 1911 the outbreak of the war in a book, "L'Avant-Guerre," with a precision and exactitude that seemed almost uncanny. In 1911 he predicted the invasion of Belgium for August, 1914, when it actually took place.

Europe is again armed to the teeth. Millions of men are in training camps and barracks. The smokestacks of steel ovens are belching fire and smoke, setting the skies aglow at nights. Suspicion and hatred still stalk the continent.

Border guards are still on a war footing. Never in the years preceding

ATTACK ON AMERICAN BY RUMANIANS BRINGS DEMAND FOR REDRESS

REVISION ORDERED ON CLASS FREIGHT RATES IN GEORGIA

State Public Service Commission Orders Material Decreases on Many Intra-State Hauls.

Complete revision of all class rates charged by carriers in Georgia, effective January 15, has been made by the Georgia public service commission in an order issued Friday and made public by James A. Perry, chairman. Under this order the general effect will be to bring about material decreases in freight rates of this kind to and from points within the boundaries of the state.

The order is in line with a general revision of class rates which has been under consideration by the carriers of the entire southeastern territory and which is to be presented to the interstate commerce commission. The commission has been conducting special hearings in various parts of the country considering revisions which are similar in many respects to those made by the Georgia commission.

The order of the commission is the result of a petition filed by all rail-

SHIPS THREATENED BY ANGRY WAVES

Temperatures of 10 Above Zero Are Predicted for Chicago Section This Morning.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Subsiding seas Saturday night failed to relieve concern felt regarding the predicament of Great Lakes vessels battered about for two days in one of the worst northwest gales in the history of the year.

Four members of the crew of the steamer Altadoc, hard aground off Keweenaw Point, battled their way ashore to report 21 comrades imprisoned on the disabled steamer were in need of food and medical attention and that the ship was damaged beyond repair.

The steamer E. W. Oglebay, driven ashore off Shot Point, near Marquette, Mich., was abandoned by her crew, and a fire was reported to have broken out in her hold. It is feared the ship will be burned to the water's edge.

One member of the crew of the Agawa, stranded off Manitoulin island, was removed but tug boats standing by were unable to rescue the remaining 20 of the crew. Although they are in no immediate peril, the ship is reported fast breaking up.

Fate of the steamer Martian, aground in Thunder bay in Lake Superior, is unknown as no word has been received from the vessel.

The freighter, George M. Humphrey, upbound from Detroit to Buffalo, was aground at Bar Point in Lake Erie. Tugs were attempting to free her.

A number of boats that have been overdue at Buffalo reported safe but several are still missing at Sault Ste Marie.

NEW COLD WAVE IN MIDDLEWEST.

Chicago, December 10.—(United News.)—A new cold wave is rushing down on the middle western states, the Chicago weather bureau announced today, forecasting temperatures of 10 degrees above zero Sunday morning.

The new blizzard will be neither so severe nor so extended in the area it covers as the cold snap of the past week which was felt over most of the country, the weather bureau added. Neither will it last so long because it will be followed almost immediately by snow and rising temperatures.

The new cold spell, shipping men feared, would add to the difficulty of rescuing crews of ships aground in the Great Lakes, and it was possible that several vessels would be caught by ice jams far from port.

At least ten ships already were reported aground or ice-bound in the lake. The crews of most of them either had been rescued or were safe on their vessels.

The steamer E. W. Oglebay, of Cleveland, was aground at Shot Point, 10 miles east of Marquette, reports from Ishpeming, Mich., said. The crew remained aboard and was in no immediate danger.

The steamer Martian was aground on Hare island, near Port Arthur, Ontario.

The Strathbogie, which had been reported missing, was safe, dispatches to Detroit said.

Fears for Crews.

Fears were expressed for the crew of the steamer Altadoc, aground at Keenewas Point in Lake Superior. The steamer Prindoc, which made Port William, Ontario, last night brought word of the grounding of the Altadoc.

The two ships were heading up the lake together when a gale struck them, Captain C. Cameron said. For three days and three nights the ships were in a blizzard.

Boy Who Slew Father To Aid Mother Freed

Grand Jury Hears Lad's Story and Refuses To Indict.

Camden, N. J., December 16.—(United News.)—Joseph Cucinotta, 13, who shot his father to death to defend his mother from abuse, was set free today.

The grand jury, deeply moved by the lad's simple, straightforward account of the killing, refused to indict him.

It was an unusual procedure to have the subject of a proposed indictment appeared before the jury, but the young patricide was brought in and presented his own case.

Joseph, who is a seventh-grade honor pupil in grammar school, told the jury how his father, John, threw his mother downstairs and fired two shots at her.

"I couldn't stand to see him do that," Joseph said. "So I got his shotgun and killed him. I am glad I did it. I would do it again."

The father will be buried Monday. Joseph said he didn't want to go to the funeral and be "pointed at," so his request that he be kept in the detention home until after the funeral was granted.

OGLETHORPE FUND LUNCH ON MONDAY

With Two Benefits and Aid of Civic Clubs, Workers Seek To Fill Atlanta Quota.

Augmented by the addition of committees from the Kiwanis, Civitan, Masonic, City and Jaycee clubs, workers in the Oglethorpe university endowment fund campaign for $500,000 will Monday begin a two weeks' drive to raise as much as possible before Christmas of the $70,000 remaining to fill Atlanta's quota of $250,000, to obtain an equal donation from J. T. Lupton, of Chattanooga, Tenn. The workers will meet Monday at 12:30 o'clock at a luncheon meeting in the Henry Grady hotel.

Plans for two big benefit performances to aid the drive will also go into final stages Monday with a series of last rehearsals for "Petrel Follies," a gala musical comedy to be staged by the students of the university Wednesday night at 8:15 o'clock in the auditorium of the Woman's club. Sale of tickets for the concert of the Russian Cossack chorus, famous male choral organization which will appear in recital for the benefit of the endowment fund at the city auditorium Thursday night at 8:15 o'clock, will also begin Monday.

The Russian Cossack chorus will be presented under the direction of its leader, Sergei Socoloff, one of the most famous vocalists in the country, and the "Petrel Follies" are being staged under the direction of Student Manager Earl Blackwell, distinguished thespian and a director of the Oglethorpe Players' club.

Both performances will be unique and highly entertaining for local audiences and large crowds are anticipated for both. On a previous concert here, the Russian Cossack chorus invoked the acclaim of critics and audiences alike.

The campaign itself still feels the need of more workers, notwithstanding the great aid occasioned by the enlistment of the various civic clubs and all those willing to devote even a small part of their time to the work are requested to communicate with drive headquarters at the Henry Grady hotel.

FOREIGN MINISTER TO PROBE ASSAULT MADE ON KELLER

American Minister to Make Personal Investigation If He Fails To Get Satisfaction.

RIOTS IN RUMANIA THREATEN CABINET

Students Hold Demonstrations Despite Government Ban; Synagogue Attacked.

Bucharest, Rumania, December 10. (AP)—A vigorous protest against the mistreatment of William N. Keller, American-born citizen of Linden Hall, Pa., by students in recent anti-Semitic riots at Oradea Mare was made by William S. Culbertson, the American minister, to M. Titulescu, foreign minister. Keller, whose injury was serious, was taken to a hospital. He told his wife to telegraph the facts of the assault to the American consul general at Bucharest. His wife did so, but the telegram never was delivered.

Culbertson, upon learning of the case through a courier who brought him an appeal from Mrs. Keller, immediately lodged a demand with the Rumanian government for investigation of the facts, indemnification of the victim and punishment of his assailants.

Deeply stirred by the case, M. Titulescu, who is still confined to his bed, sent for the American minister and forthwith expressed the sincerest regret of the Rumanian government. He dispatched a special investigator from the department of justice to Oradea Mare with instructions to probe the assault to the bottom, have Keller's assailants apprehended and make the fullest report to the government.

Keller, who formerly was connected with the Near East relief, is in business with his father at Oradea Mare. The American minister told M. Titulescu that if he failed to obtain satisfaction from the Rumanian government he would go personally to Oradea Mare and investigate the case.

AUGUSTA COUNCIL MEMBER IS HELD IN M'NAIR DEATH

Augusta, Ga., December 10.—(AP)—Wallace M. Doorn, member of the city council of Augusta and prominent in local political circles, was arrested late tonight on a murder warrant, charging him with implication in the death of John McNair, 38, of Wrens, Ga. McNair was attacked Sunday night, November 26, at a point on Federal Highway No. 1, several miles south of Augusta, and died at a local hospital late Friday p. m., from a blow dealt with a blunt weapon, it was brought to light at a coroner's inquest today.

Charlie Thurmond and Miss Thelma Andrews, both of this city, are being held by sheriff's officers for "investigation."

'Light Your Living Trees'

:: CONSTITUTION BACKS CAMP FIRE GIRLS' PLAN ::

For Yuletime Loveliness

BY ELMO HAMBY.

A myriad of tiny, twinkling, multi-colored lights reflected on the colorful shrubbery of every lawn in the city, creating a unique and beautiful Christmas atmosphere. The brilliance of a thousand little electric stars humming "peace on earth. . . . "

Sounds like a fairyland, doesn't it? And yet that's exactly what the Camp Fire Girls, cooperating with The Constitution, intend to make Atlanta this Christmas. A gorgeously colorful paradise of warm light and color.

Here's the plan.

Heretofore, at Christmas time, it has been the custom to make the interior of the home reflect the joy and the glad spirit of the occasion. But this year and every succeeding Christmas, the Camp Fire girls and The Constitution are going to ask you to show the entire world you're happy.

"Lighting the Living Trees" is what the Camp Fire Girls call it, and that's exactly what it is. And all that is necessary is a couple of dollars and a desire to compete with your neighbor to make your lawn and exterior of your house just a little bit prettier and more colorful than his.

Little electric bulbs do the work. Intertwine them in the branches of your evergreens or shrubbery and they seem like bits of bright spirits sent from within your home to cheer the passing world.

You can get almost a basketful of small bulbs for a dollar. And the wire costs but a few cents. And the result is, simply, that you will make your little share of the world a brighter and a cheerier place to live in around Christmas time.

In order to arouse a spirit of competition between the various communities and neighborhoods, The Constitution will print the plans of various homes with names, and if you arrange a striking scene, there'll probably be pictures to run in the paper.

Think it over. And then sit down and write The Constitution Christmas Tree editor of your plans to beautify and illuminate your "living trees" this Christmas.

R. C. Turner, city electrician, has approved the plan and issues the following instructions:

Christmas tree stringers of electric

Doctor Describes Dangers Of 100-Mile Trip to Save Boy

:: DOGS CARRY PHYSICIAN OVER MOUNTAIN ::

BY DR. DON NUMBERS.

(This is the personal narrative of a country doctor who, traveling by dog sled, dared 100 miles of Idaho mountain road, drifted deep in snow, to save the life of a boy. He didn't want to write the article which follows. At first he refused. He yielded only when he was convinced that what he had done would reflect glory on his profession. The doctor covered the hundred miles in thirty hours, considered a record in view of the obstacles of the storm and savage country. He crossed one mountain pass 11,000 feet high.)

(Special dispatch to The Constitution and North American Newspaper Alliance. Copyright, 1927, in all countries by North American Newspaper Alliance.)

McCall, Idaho, December 10.—At 2 o'clock last Sunday morning I was notified that a boy faced death a hundred miles away in the mountains. He lay ill with intestinal flue and pneumonia in a shack at the Wordenoff mine. The name of the boy is Emmett Routson.

The snow was deep. The only way to reach that boy was by dog sled and it was Big Jerry himself, the leader of Roy Stover's strong team of black and tans, that got the little town of McCall awake to what was going on.

Stover is a racing dog driver who tells no one but Jerry when a special effort is expected of his dogs. But the big black Labrador was telling the world as he dashed back and forth from mate to mate, letting them know important business was ahead. Meanwhile Stover was dragging out the harness for the dogs and getting the rig ready.

All harness runs have a serious and dignified place in the minds of trained racing dogs. They are a conceited lot when they are working, anxious, ambitious, often vicious, but they are honest.

Stover trusted in this honesty, and was sure of their willing ability to go a long way as he harnessed them, hooked up the collar and lead chains, and loaded them into Frenchy's big truck. The truck was used to travel eight miles to Payette Lake, where more fine dogs, the pick of Warren Brown's 1926 American derby winners, arrived in another truck.

Composite Team Formed.

Here a composite team was formed—two wheel dogs, two abreast ahead of them, then two more abreast, and a single line of four on out to Jerry, the leader.

We moved out into the cold night with hardly a sound, and sped through the snow toward Rezgdorf. Speeding

HAMMER SLAYER PLANS FOR TRIAL

Painesville, Ohio, December 10.—(United News.)—Puzzled at finding herself a slayer, longing for once to walk humbly in the village main street she hated, Mrs. Velma West, former Cleveland society debutante, wept in her cell here today while "Eddie," the earnest young nursery-man she married and killed, was buried.

She wanted to attend the funeral. Instead, she talked to Francis W. Poulson, a Cleveland lawyer, who, it is said, will direct the defense of the puzzling young woman who killed her husband with a hammer and then joined her city friends, bested them at bridge and sang "blues" songs to them.

Hopeful of Acquittal.

After interviewing Mrs. West, Poulson said he was hopeful of an acquittal.

"There are many facts in this case not yet revealed," Poulson said. "The domestic life of these two people was not a happy one. There were financial difficulties, jealousy and incompatability of both with the life of the community. Self-defense offers a strong justification. It fits in with temporary insanity."

Poulson intimated he would ask to have the charge lessened when Mrs. West is brought into court for preliminary hearing Monday.

200 Autos in Line.

While Velma talked with her lawyers, main street in Perry filled with funeral-goers, emptied in slow-moving procession toward the wooded Perry cemetery on the edge of town, and filled again. Two hundred automobiles were in the procession. The Rev. E. P. Wykoff, Methodist minister, who Sunday was to have received Velma into membership in his church, thus solving a religious disagreement in the life of the young couple, officiated at the funeral. The Rev. Mr. Wykoff visited Velma and prayed with her only a week ago, persuading her to join the church.

Employees at the hotel and the soda fountain, store owners of his friends and neighbors of "Eddie" West, all attended the services. The comfortable West home was not large enough to hold them, even with folding chairs from the undertakers. The town's population was increased to almost a thousand for a few hours.

Mrs. West cried because Sheriff Rasmussen refused to let her attend. His refusal was not intended as an act of mercy, but it was. After the funeral the clacking, neighborly tongues were set wagging by the relief from emotion. Nothing in Velma's appearance as she was known in Perry was left undiscussed. Her blonde bobbed hair with its permanent wave, her china-blue eyes, her thin 110-pound figure, her short skirts, her cigarettes, her defiant mannerisms—all were recalled and sifted judiciously. The neighbors were merely trying to arrive at a conclusion as to why this young woman, "who had everything," slew her husband with such appalling brutality.

Some Say She's Crazy.

Some of the kindest said she was crazy, but doubted their own words. Some of the tightest-lipped prayed for her soul.

Velma's father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Van Woert, of Cleveland, paused here before attending the funeral services for their son-in-law.

"The Wests are fine people," said the father. "They received and treated us most respectfully when we visited them. They do not want to prosecute anyone."

Mrs. Van Woert said her daughter was lonesome in jail.

"She was in love with Eddie," the mother said. "She was in love with him the day they met. I knew of this love but their elopement was a surprise to me."

Mrs. Van Woert was inclined to advance physical causes. Velma was a robust child, she said, but later developed pains in the head and ears.

Until she suddenly asked Sheriff Rasmussen if she could attend, Mrs. West showed no interest in her husband's funeral.

Dressed and "Primped."

She has dressed and "primped" in jail as mechanically and carefully as if she were to attend another bridge party at any minute. Her frock is of green silk, barely reaching to her thin knees and caught at the shoulder with modish, artificial pink flowers. Her blonde hair—her prettiest possession—is carefully groomed and glossy, and her mouth is bowed by touched of crimson lipstick so thick it reddens the ends of her frequent cigarettes.

To Attorney Poulson she poured out monotonously every detail of her married life that she could recall, and the details of the murder itself.

Examination of the body before young West was buried showed a dozen hammer blows, any eight of which would have been fatal. He was a six-footer and an athlete weighing nearly 200 pounds. How his 110-pound wife beat him to his knees and killed him is one of the minor mysteries troubling the townspeople who knew of "Eddie's" strength.

GREAT FIGHT SEEN OVER PRAYER BOOK

BY JOHN STEELE.

(Copyright, 1927, for The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

London, December 10.—Three days next week the whole time of the house of lords and one day at least of the house of commons will be devoted to a discussion of the prayer book of the Church of England, and the greatest fight between Protestant and Catholic schools since the reformation is expected to be staged.

The book has been approved by all the assemblies of the church and now comes before parliament for final approval, without which it cannot be adopted. This provides the spectacle of commoners and peers who are Catholics, non-conformists, and of no religion at all, debating and deciding the doctrine for the Angelican church.

The debate will last in the house of lords through Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, and will be taken up in commons Thursday. Every one of the two arch-bishops and 24 bishops is expected to speak. Many of these bishops were appointed by David Lloyd George, a Baptist, and Ramsey MacDonald, a Presbyterian. The fight is entirely outside party lines.

In the house of commons the attack on the "Romanizing tendency" of the book will be led by Sir William Joynson-Hicks, the home secretary, while his fellow cabinet member, W. C. Bridgeman, first lord of the admiralty will lead for the book and the Catholic party. In the labor party Henry L. Slesser, who was one of the law officers in the MacDonald government, will support the book, while MacDonald himself and some of his Scottish followers will oppose it.

The chief objection of the new book by the Protestants is that it allows the reservation of the sacrament and also, inferentially, it is claimed, admits the doctrine of trans-substantiation.

Junior Prom Of Wisconsin Is Theatened

Madison, Wis., December 10.—(AP)—Clinton B. Ballard, superintendent of public property, today threatened to revoke a permit for University of Wisconsin students to hold their 1928 junior promenade in the state capitol unless he could learn the author of a letter published in The Daily Cardinal, student newspaper.

The letter ridiculed the assertion that there was no drinking at the annual promenades.

Ballard said "they can either tell me the name of the author of that letter," which was signed "Sis" "or they may look for another place to hold the prom."

The letter from "Sis" said that students attending the annual celebration often drank to enable them to tolerate a dull companion.

The letter said: "I'm going to drink at the next prom, and if 'Bill' doesn't like it' perhaps some one else will. I'm tired of having to bear up through a dull evening. I drink at other parties, and I'll drink at the prom, even if Governor Zeimmerman is there in person to enforce the 18th amendment. Radical? No. Just one of many, yours, SIS."

Ballard said this is an insult to the governor, and the laws of the state and nation.

Flapper Inherits Beauty Aids From Nile Maids of 3000 B. C.

Chicago, December 10.—(AP)—When the modern flapper slips into her "foundation garment" of a morning, decorates her wrist with a slave bracelet, pencils her eyebrows and rouges her cheeks, she doubtless reflects that all such aids to beauty are an outgrowth of the times in which she lives.

But the well-dressed woman of ancient Egypt, 5,000 years ago, did almost precisely the same thing, and wore almost the identical furbelows.

The history of women's styles has repeated itself, says Miss Kathryn Cunningham, who has made a study of "foundation garments" from the times of antiquity down to the present for a large corset company.

A mural drawing of the lovely Princess Sedet, who resided in Egypt in 3000 B. C., shows her wearing a tight-fitting, one-piece garment, upheld by two shoulder straps which conceivably might have been the model for the piece of apparel now worn by women under their dresses.

The Egyptian woman of fashion was never seen without her "Kohl pot," which she used to paint her eyes with kohl or stibium, and which was nothing more nor less than the forerunner of the lipstick or eyebrow pencil now carried in women's pocketbooks. The first shoes worn were sandals, such as ultra-smart shoe designers are now producing.

"The ancient beauties realized the effectiveness of naturalness in appearance," Miss Cunningham says. "They started what is a natural evolution of women's dress and habits. It has taken a long time to achieve the end, through the mystery of what women wore in the Victorian ages, but the time is here now."

Play Costs Backer Million

:: HAS RIGHT TO WASTE MONEY, HE SAYS ::

But "Angel" Will Not Quit

New York, December 10.—(United News.)—"The Ladder," Broadway's greatest theatrical failure, will move into a new playhouse Monday and resume the business of losing a million dollars for its backer, a Texas oil man.

"The Ladder" is the play that won't say die. It has played more than 400 performances and hasn't shown a profit for a single night. It has lost well over $800,000 for Edgar B. Davis, the Texas millionaire backer. For more than a year it tried to lure an audience, and failed.

And now, with its doors thrown open free to the public, Davis has announced that it will continue to run on indefinitely. The free patrons are beginning, for the first time, to pack the house.

The urge that prompts its wealthy "angel" to keep "The Ladder" on the great white way is as unfathomable as it was a week after the play opened, when it clearly showed it could never pay its own way.

Losing thousands of dollars a week, Davis has no intention of stopping it. Quite to the contrary, he has ordered it revised and will give it a new premiere soon. He didn't care how much it cost him, he said.

The theme of "The Ladder" is built around reincarnation. Its story follows the march of a woman's soul down the ages, seeking happiness. It shows her in the medieval period of the Crusades, then shifts its action to England in the days of the Restoration, then to New York just after the civil war, thence to the present day. It is the type of play known as "heavy."

Always in search of a motive behind unfathomable things, newspapermen have atributed Davis' endless patience with his "flop" to his belief in the doctrine of reincarnation and his desire to spread that belief. But Davis will not admit it.

Davis has done other things similarly as strange. He once gave a huge barbecue and picnic in his home town of Luling, Texas, and when guests became so numerous that they exhausted the automobile parking space, he bought two adjacent fields of crops for $30,000 and invited them to drive their cars in and make themselves at home.

The backer of "The Ladder" is one of those millionaires who has made fortunes, lost them, and made them back again. Most of his money comes from oil holdings, b t he made other millions in rubber.

He has repeatedly said that the "few thousands" "The Ladder" has taken from his pocketbook meant nothing to him.

"Any man earning $50 a week has a right to waste $5 of it," he said. "I make something like $10,000 a week. I feel no compunction about losing $6,000 a week or so on a play I like."

Davis hasn't minded the laughs that Broadway has enjoyed at his expense. He merely wants to be allowed to run his play as long as he likes, without any outside interference.

He raised rubber in Sumatra, where experts told him it couldn't be done. He always has done things that the all-knowing said were impossible. That is perhaps one reason why he is so determined to stick by "The Ladder."

WITNESSES CALLED FOR CALLES PROBE

statement, but there was no explanation of why such an agreement had been entered into.

Among the reports was one that a subpoena had been issued for Arturo M. Elias, Mexican consul general at New York and a half brother of President Calles, who in the natural course of the investigation would be expected to have the role of the most important witness.

Committeemen declined to discuss those reports and the senate sergeant at arms, David S. Barry, said he was under orders of such character that officially he did not even know that there was such a committee as the senate created yesterday after the publication in the Hearst papers of the charges of a fund for senators.

Speculation on Senators.

Aside from that as to the authority of the committee to summon Mexican diplomatic and consular officials, there still was speculation as to the identity of the four senators for whom it is reported the huge sum was created. At least two sets of names of senators were going the rounds of the discussion.

As to the authority of the committee to summon Elias and perhaps other consular officers there seemed a division of opinion in some quarters, but among senators who have inquired into the situation there was little doubt that subpoenas could be issued for such officers.

Attention was called that there is no treaty of amity and commerce between the United States and Mexico and in the absence of such a treaty with its usual provision making consular officers immune from summons before the courts of the country to which appointed it was held that the committee had ample authority to act.

An informal statement that the state department has no information as to the authenticity of the documents was authorized today at the department. Committeemen declined to give their views on that question in advance of the hearings, which are set for next Thursday.

QUESTION AUTHORITY OF U. S. COMMITTEE.

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Authority of the special senate committee to summon Mexican consular officers in its investigation of charges in the Hearst newspapers that a fund of $1,200,000 was raised for four United States senators was challenged tonight by Manuel C. Tellez, the Mexican ambassador to Washington.

The ambassador's statement was made after he had been advised unofficially that the committee was planning to summon Arturo M. Elias, Mexican consul general at New York, and half brother of President Calles, who figured in most of the purported correspondence relating to the senators.

"In my opinion Elias will not come to Washington at the summons of the senate committee," Ambassador Tellez said. "He will not be obligated to do so because he can stand on his rights of immunity under international law."

Officials Immune.

The ambassador said that while there was no treaty of commerce and amity between the United States and Mexico, which usually contains a provision giving consular officers immunity from court processes, it was an established practice under international law that such officers were immune from subpoenas.

"The embassy has made two formal denials of the authenticity of the documents," the ambassador added, "and has no further comment to make thereon. The senate has obligated itself to investigate the documents and as far as I am concerned this is purely an affair of the senate."

State department officials appear to hold with the ambassador that there is every rule of international custom and practice against summoning consular officers before even senate committees, but some senators are known to disagree with that proposition and it was indicated today that the committee would seek to obtain the presence of Elias.

RUMANIA PROBING ATTACK ON AMERICAN

bath. Thirty members of the congregation were beaten and severely injured.

The manifestants then invaded and wrecked two restaurants, terrifying their Hebrew owners.

Police reinforcements were sent out and arrested and imprisoned 85 of the rioting students.

Similar demonstrations also were held here where the government rushed armed troops to guard all streets of the city.

Fiery Speeches.

The mob manifestations in the capital, however, did not turn to violence, merely being confined to fiery speeches against the Jews and demands of the government for the release of 400 students now held in military barracks of Bucharest.

Because of the censorship of domestic newspapers the serious character of the Transylvania disturbances in just becoming known to the Rumanian public which realizes the deplorable consequences such acts of violence against one of the country's principal racial minorities will have abroad.

Violent differences are said to have arisen between cabinet members, each of whom disclaims responsibility for the outrages. Nicholas Titulescu has complained bitterly to Premier Bratianu and J. G. Duca, minister of the interior, that such occurrences ruin the good work that he had accomplished abroad as foreign minister. At the same time M. Titulescu is preparing a note of protest against the utterances in the Hungarian parliament by Acting Premier Wass, who declared the riots showed the inability of the Rumanian government to maintain order and peace in Transylvania where there are thousands of Hungarians. M. Titulescu holds that these incidents, however unfortunate, are of purely domestic concern to Rumania and give Hungary no right to intervene.

League May Hear Pleas.

It is understood that the Rumanian minister at Geneva has instructions to present Rumania's side of the case in the event the Hungarians bring the question of the riots before the League of Nations council.

All liberal newspapers today attacked Hungary, saying the recent race riots are being used by the Hungarian government to provoke intervention by the League of Nations.

The municipal council at Cluj today disclaimed all responsibility for excesses of the students there, saying they warned military and civil authorities and the cabinet in ample time to prevent the disturbances.

Four hundred students interned at the Bucharest military barracks for their share in the riots, went on a hunger strike today. They complained of lack of heat, bathing facilities and proper food.

Dr. Julio Maniu, head of the national peasants' party, today condemned the government in the bitterest terms for allowing the outrages, saying they are a disgrace to the country at home and abroad.

REED COMMITTEE ASKS AUTHORITY

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Further hearings in the cases of Senators-elect Frank L. Smith, of Illinois, and William S. Vare, of Pennsylvania, will await action by the senate on the resolution of Senator Reed, democrat, Missouri, reaffirming the authority of the special campaign funds committee.

This was decided today by the committee after more than an hour of informal discussion in the office of the chairman, Senator Reed. The resolution was presented in the senate yesterday, but consideration of it was forced over until Monday by Senator Reed, republicans, Pennsylvania, who led the fight to seat Vare.

Will Call Meeting.

As soon as the resolution is adopted Chairman Reed will call the committee together with a view to fixing an early date for opening the hearings on the first of the cases to be taken up. Whether that will be the Smith or the Vare election remains to be determined.

Questions of procedure were discussed by the committeemen with opinions expressed that since in the Vare case, at least, there would be certain facts within the jurisdiction of both the special committee and the regular privileges and elections committee, some consultations should be had for cooperation between the two groups.

Contest by Wilson.

The contest for Vare's seat brought by his democratic opponent, William B. Wilson, secretary of labor in the Wilson administration, is before the privileges and elections committee for investigation, but the inquiry is held up pending a reorganization of that committee after the senate has perfected its organization.

Senator Reed, of Missouri, said the sense of the members of his committee was that just as soon as the resolution of its authority had been adopted it would proceed promptly to carry out the mandate of the senate in resuming the investigations begun early last year and prosecuted until a question arose as to the authority of the committee to act. A resolution reaffirming its powers was lost in the senate filibuster at the close of the last session of congress.

REVISION ORDERED ON FREIGHT RATES

roads for authority to revise the rates, and also to cancel all exceptions to southern classification and to cancel all less than carload special commodity rates. The commission denied the railroads' petition to cancel the exceptions to the classification and less than carload commodity rates.

The interstate commerce commission, commencing in the spring of 1922, conducted a general investigation of class rate structure throughout southern territory, and also the rates between southern territory and territory north of the Ohio and Potomac rivers: this investigation lasted over a period of approximately two years. The purpose of this general investigation was to remove discriminations, and provide uniform rates to the end that the rate for a shorter distance would not be greater than the rate for a longer distance. It was the desire of the interstate commerce commission to provide rates for interstate application that could also be used by the various states in the south for intrastate application, and with this end in view, a committee of state commissioners, representing the southern states, cooperated with the interstate commerce commission in its general investigation, Chairman Perry, of the Georgia commission, acting as chairman of the state cooperative committee.

Effective May 1, 1923, the Georgia commission revised all class rates within the state of Georgia, for the purpose of removing discriminations between the various cities and towns within the state. The present rates in Georgia provide a slightly higher rate where traffic is handled over more than one railroad. However, the new rates to become effective January 15 make the same rate where the traffic is handled over more than one railroad as if it were handled over only one railroad, thereby every shipper will pay rates according to distance and location, except that in the case of a town being located on what is known as a short, or weak, line, rates are made slightly higher than the rates to towns located on the strictly trunk lines.

The commission held hearings several weeks ago on the petition of the carriers, and traffic representatives representing shippers throughout the state were present at the hearings and offered no objections to the revision of the rates, but did object to the cancellation of the classification exceptions and less than carload commodity rates at this time. It was agreed at the hearings that the shippers and carriers would hold conferences at a later date with the view of making some joint recommendations to the commission regarding this feature of the petition.

Priceless Art Objects

:: PUBLISHER SELLS OUT TO MOVE IN APARTMENT ::

Are Bid in "For Song"

Hollywood, Calif., December 10.—(AP)—Christmas shoppers and others who bid in the furnishings of the Hollywood home of Eugene V. Brewster, wealthy magazine publisher, did so at $50,000 under their inventoried value.

The figures are Brewster's own, announced today as the publisher and his screen-actress wife, Corliss Palmer, abandoned their home and moved into an apartment.

Brewster said the art objects, antiques and first editions gathered by him went under the autcioneer's hammer at a fraction of their value. Paintings by Guy Wiggins and George Innes sold for $110 and $70 each. One by James Hat, appraised at $2,000, brought an offer of $110 after the bidding had been started at $1 by a woman who said she liked the frame. A book of 350 autographs of world-famous statesmen, philosophers, artists and other notables was sold for $135.

Two exceptions in the sale were two little statues appraised at $5 which brought $100.

Brewster a few years ago figured in the news by reason of his domestic tangles, which included an alienation of affections suit by the former Mrs. Brewster against Miss Palmer and the publisher's later Mexican divorce and his marriage to the actress.

When he announced his intention of auctioning off his house furnishings and art collection, Brewster said his wife's film work made it more convenient for them to live in an apartment.

of Utah, Norbeck, Dale, of Vermont, and Oddie, of Nevada, outranking him. However, Smoot, Dale and Oddie desired other chairmanships and Nye was placed in position for the appointment.

McLean Resigns.

The vacancy on the banking committee was caused by the resignation of Senator McLean, of Connecticut, who did not care to longer carry the burdens of that post. Had Norbeck taken the lands committee, Edge, of New Jersey, would have been in line for the banking chairmanship. However, Senator Norbeck appeared in person before the committee on committees to ask for that place.

Frazier became chairman of the Indian committee over Curtis, of Kansas, the republican leader, and McNary, of Oregon, who have other important assignments to committees. Howell was in line for the chairmanship of the claims committee.

COOLIDGE READY FOR PEACE PACTS

Washington, December 10.—(United News.)—President Coolidge was represented as ready to have the American government start conversations with France on the framing of a treaty to outlaw war between the two nations.

Jane Addams, internationally known social worker and founder of Hull house, Chicago, reported after a white house call that Coolidge expected the conversations to begin upon the return to Paris of American Ambassador Myron T. Herrick.

Miss Addams, heading a delegation from the Women's League for Peace and Freedom, of which she is president, presented to the president a petition bearing 30,000 signatures urging an arbitration treaty along lines recently proposed by Foreign Minister Briand of France.

The petition suggested arbitration treaties with France and Great Britain as a start for universal recognition of the plan, under which the nations would bind themselves to settle their disputes across a conference table and before an impartial referee. Arbitration, conciliation or mediation would be called upon in all disputes which diplomacy failed to settle.

U. S. Official In Berlin Due To Visit Here

Douglas P. Miller, assistant American commercial attache at Berlin, will visit Atlanta Thursday and remain through December 17, according to announcement made by Captain Charles L. McLain, assistant district manager of the Atlanta office, United States department of commerce. Mr. Miller will make his headquarters in the department's offices in the federal building where he may be reached by Atlantans desiring to confer with him on conditions and trade prospects in Germany.

A feature of Mr. Miller's visit will be an address before the Atlanta Foreign Trade club, Thursday night, in the main dining room of the Chamber of Commerce, on the occasion of the club's annual meeting. H. O. Williamson, export manager, Atlantic Steel company and president of the club, will preside.

Mr. Miller has had a remarkable background of experience in Europe and the Near East. He is a Rhodes scholar graduate of Oxford university. During the war he served in Mesopotamia and Siberia and immediately after the armistice had charge of the repatriation of war prisoners in Stettin, Germany. Prior to his connection with the government, he was engaged in the export business between London and New York. He has served successively as special agent, regional assistant and assistant chief of the western European division, bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, trade commissioner to Germany and assistant commercial attache at Berlin. He is the author of "A Financial Review of Great Britain," and "Budgets of Western European Countries."

Mr. Miller will spend Friday in Columbus, Ga., in company with Harry O. Mitchell, district manager of the Atlanta office, who is now in Savannah where he will address a group representing the local business interests in connection with the establishment of a cooperative office of the department of commerce in Columbus, returning Saturday morning to Atlanta.

Monday he will address a meeting of the chamber of commerce at Greensboro, N. C.

Health conditions throughout the world in general were better during the year ending June 30, 1927, than for any previous year on record, says the United States public health service.

W. C. T. U. BACKS OKLAHOMA CHIEF

Oklahoma City, December 10.—(AP) The Women's Christian Temperance union of Oklahoma today entered the controversy between Governor Henry S. Johnston and members of the state legislature with a call to its 70,000 members to pray that "our dry governor may not be impeached."

Mrs. Elizabeth House, state president, and Mrs. Josephine M. Buhle, state evangelistic director of the W. C. T. U., issued the call which asks for a month of prayer.

Uphold "Dry" Governor.

Asserting that the self-convened session of the legislature, which has under way an investigation of Governor Johnston's administration, was convoked by the legislators to impeach the executive, the call urges W. C. T. U. members to "uphold our dry governor to the throne of grace that he may not be impeached but may continue in office."

Governor Johnston is a militant prohibitionist. The dry question had not been raised heretofore in the conflict between the governor and the faction of the legislature insisting that irregularities in the executive office and other departments warranted investigation with a view of impeachments proceedings should sufficient evidence be developed.

Charges of intimidation were hurled from both the governor's office and the legislature.

Criticizes Governor.

The Rev. Will M. Thompson, chairman of one of the investigating committees of the house, criticized Governor Johnston today for characterizing the legislative session as a "miniature revolution, "which had no legal status," and asserted, "We are determined to do right and no intimidation will stop us."

Thompson is pastor of a church of the same denomination to which Governor Johnston belongs.

Justifying his refusal to issue a call for the session, which would settle all doubt as to the legality of the legislature's acts, the governor asserted he had refused to submit to "brow beating" by the legislators. The demand for the session was made, he charged, on the theory that he would not dare to refuse for fear of leaving the impression that he "had something to hide."

FIVE IMPEACHMENT CHARGES ARE VOTED.

Oklahoma City, Okla., December 10. (United News.)—The insurgent house investigating committee late today voted five impeachment charges against Governor Henry S. Johnston, to be presented to the house at 10 a. m. Monday.

MELLON MATCHES RECIPES WITH CAPITAL MATRONS

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Secretary Mellon is the only male member of a group of presidential and congressional housewives whose recipes will comprise the menu to be served Monday at the first "cook book luncheon" of the Congressional club.

Along with Mrs. Calvin Coolidge's recipe for corn muffins and that of Mrs. Thomas R. Marshall, widow of the former vice president, for bouillon, was entered Mr. Mellon's own formula for curried chicken a la Indienne.

Insurance, Investment, Heads Due Here Today On Tour of Inspection

Officials Surveying Southeast With View to Expanding Holdings; Will Tour Atlanta Monday.

First-hand information by which they may determine the advisability of future investments in the southeast will be sought today by a party of executives of leading insurance companies and investment houses of the nation on a tour of properties of the Georgia Power company in north Georgia and Atlanta. The visitors will be met this morning at Toccoa, Ga., by power company officials, and conducted over the properties in north Georgia before coming in to Atlanta.

The visit of the northern business men is seen as additional evidence of the keen interest on the part of large investors in the north and east in the industrial development of Georgia and the southeast and the opportunities this section offers to new capital. Companies represented by executives on the tour are already large security holders in southern enterprises and the object of the visit is to study the possibilities for future expansion in this state and section.

To Visit Power Plants.

W. E. Mitchell, vice president and general manager of the power company, and a number of other officials will meet the special train of the visiting capitalists at Toccoa this morning, and during the day will conduct the party of visitors on a tour of the company's hydro-electric developments at Tallulah Falls, Tugalo and Yonah, arriving in Atlanta Sunday night. On Monday the visitors will be carried on a tour of the business section and properties of the company in this city. Prominent Atlantans will meet the visitors at a luncheon Monday afternoon at the Druid Hills Golf club, to which newspaper publishers, local officials of the companies represented by executives of the companies on the tour, and officers and directors of the power company have been invited.

After leaving Atlanta Monday night, the party will visit properties of the Southeastern Power and Light company at Gulfport and Biloxi, Miss., returning by way of Mobile and Montgomery to Birmingham for inspection of the properties of the Alabama Power company. The government's nitrate plants and power projects at Muscle Shoals will also be visited before the members of the party return to their homes. While primarily interested in the power situation, the visitors are attracted here by the rapid industrial growth of the section in recent years.

Eyes on Southeast.

Capital, wherever it is, has its eyes on the southeast," said P. S. Arkwright, president of the company, in announcing arrangements for the tour. "While all the world has heard of the remarkable changes taking place in this section, these men, representing millions of dollars of investment capital, are coming here to see for themselves what Georgia has to offer. If they find, as we know to be the case, that Georgia's future possibilities far overshadow its present remarkable development, and that Georgia has not only the natural resources and other industrial advantages but also a friendly public attitude toward new capital, it certainly will influence them toward making additional investments in this section.

"The insurance companies and other organizations represented in this party have large funds which they must invest in sound securities. We want to get some of those funds for Georgia. Hence this tour, and I am optimistic that it will result in large new investments of outside capital to finance the further development of our state."

Personnel of Party.

The personnel of the party is as follows:

Hartford, Georgia L. Burnham, treasurer, Aetna (fire) Insurance company; Arthur M. Collens, vice president, Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance company; Robert L. Fisher, assistant treasurer, Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance company; Spence T. Mitchell, manager, The Investment Bureau (affiliated with Phoenix (fire) Insurance company and Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance company).

Detroit, Albert J. Hettinger, Jr., director of research, Investment Research corporation.

New York, Samuel S. Hall, Jr., assistant secretary, in charge of investments, The Carnegie Foundation; Arthur P. Maher, assistant secretary, in charge of investments, National Surety company; Ralph S. Child, Bonbright and company; G. Harris Baker, Bonbright and company; Fritz P. Lindh, Bonbright and company.

Montreal, H. P. Thornhill, assistant treasurer, Sun Life Assurance company of Canada.

SPECIAL COUNCIL MEETING MONDAY

All measures passed last Monday by city council will be up for consideration at a special meeting of council at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon.

Negotiations between Mayor Ragsdale and the Georgia Power company relative to the company's prospective donation of $400,000 to the building of the Pryor street and Central avenue viaducts will be resumed early this week, when Mayor Ragsdale returns to his office after a short siege of influenza. A few details are to be ironed out before the contract is signed and the money deposited in the bank by the power company to the city's credit, it was stated Saturday.

The next meeting of general council is set for Monday, December 19.

Charge Violation Of Auction Law To Arrested Man

B. I. Man, 43, who resides at the Cecil hotel and is employed as auctioneer by May Brothers, jewelry store on Peachtree street, at Five Points, was placed under bond of $200 Saturday when arrested for violating the city ordinance in relation to selling goods by auction, it was disclosed in police records.

According to report of City Detective A. G. Stone, who made the arrest, Man was offering for sale by auction a diamond ring, to which no tag of identification, as required by the city ordinance, was attached. While Man was asking for bids, Detective Stone stepped up to the counter and demanded an inspection of the ring and then requested that Man accompany him to police headquarters.

At the station house Man's bond was assessed at $200 and his case set to come up for hearing before Recorder A. W. Callaway, in police court, Monday. The bond was made by Man's employer, Harry May, who accompanied the detective and Man to police headquarters.

According to the city ordinance the ring should have borne a tag giving the weight of the diamond and other descriptive matter, it was explained.

Curtailed Xmas Recess Ordered For City Schools

Christmas holidays for students of Atlanta's public school system will be four days shorter this year than in previous years, it was learned Saturday from H. Reid Hunter, assistant superintendent of schools. School will officially close at 11 o'clock Friday, December 23, and resume daily sessions on Monday, January 2, according to the official announcement.

In the order issued Saturday school officials clearly pointed out that students who leave school three days or more in advance of the holiday recess will not be permitted to return without a new ticket from the registration office and special permission from the principal to whom students are responsible.

In many instances parents planning holiday trips allow their children to leave school a few days earlier, but a special effort is being made by the school authorities this year to keep the students in school, hence the order.

COLORED GIRL TO GIVE FIRST PIANO RECITAL

Frances Grimes, an honor graduate of the music department of Fiske university, will give her first public piano recital Friday night at the First Congregational church, corner Houston and Courtland streets. The recital will be sponsored by the Alumni association of the Booker Washington High school.

Frances comes from one of Atlanta's older colored families, having been born and reared in a cottage out in the Spelman Seminary neighborhood on Chestnut street. Her early education was secured in the city grammar schools. She later studied at one of the private colleges. After a term of years she entered Fisk university, Nashville, Tenn., thence to the New England Conservatory of Music. At Fisk she graduated in music in 1925, and two years later, the College of Arts. Two years were spent at the New England Conservatory of Music.

For excellency in scholarship and musical technique she has already distinguished herself, having won upon two occasons the Juilliard prizes, the first while at Fisk from the Juilliard foundation and the latter by a competitive examination through the New York foundation. This second prize was a fellowship award of $1,000.

APARTMENT FIRE BLAMED ON TRASH TOO NEAR FURNACE

Trash piled too near a furnace is believed to have been responsible for a basement fire early Saturday morning which drove residents of the Hillsboro apartments, at 592 Boulevard, N. E., into the wintry streets in their nightclothes, according to fire department records. The blaze was extinguished with difficulty by five companies of firemen though the injury to the building was restricted mostly to smoke and water damage.

Slight damage was done to the homes of Mrs. E. H. Wrese, 294 Elmira place, N. E., and W. A. Royal, 534 Central avenue, S. W., by fires which originated during the thawing of frozen water pipes, according to the fire department. The fire department was called back to the Central avenue address within an hour of the first blaze to extinguish another fire, this time of undetermined origin, it was reported.

POSTAL RECEIPTS PASS 1926 TOTAL

With a new high mark of $4,164,692.82, surpassing last year's record-breaking total, Atlanta's postal receipts for 1927 are expected to reach the $4,500,000 mark before the year is over, it was learned Saturday from postoffice authorities.

Receipts during the first 11 months showed a substantial gain over the corresponding months of 1926, each month passing the $300,000 mark. December, only one-third gone, is expected to pass the half-million total, it was stated.

Receipts by months for 1927 follow:

January	$386,863.00
February	381,273.85
March	404,060.34
April	367,818.60
May	345,554.61
June	340,515.82
July	318,029.24
August	358,625.93
September	375,776.11
October	381,480.76
November	381,931.12

Receipts for the month of December through Friday were in the neighborhood of $127,000, which, together with the total of the first 11 months, put the year's total substantially beyond the 1926 figures.

Commenting on the fact that a new record had been made in postal figures, Postmaster Edwin K. Large pointed out that postal figures are a gauge of the business enjoyed by a section, and consequently reflect its prosperity.

METROPOLITAN MEN PUT BIG DRIVE OVER

In keeping with the spirit and time of the year, the three districts of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company in Atlanta recently inaugurated a campaign for the week of December 5, during which they offered three million dollars on the income basis to the people of Atlanta.

The campaign closed Saturday at a meeting at the chamber of commerce, when it was reported that the goal set for the drive had been fully subscribed. The feat sets a new achievement for the Metropolitan in the south, it is said, being participated in by 150 of the company's representatives.

Managers of the three districts—George M. Phillips, Frank Gooding and F. R. Goodson—contributed heavily to the success of the undertaking. Mr. Phillips, of the Piedmont district, on two occasions has led his district in successful weekly million-dollar campaigns.

Candler Airport Lauded in Report Of U. S. Official

William B. Hartsfield, who practices at law when he is not devoting attention to the improvement of Candler field, was the proudest man in Atlanta Saturday.

The reason for Mr. Hartsfield's unbounded joy was a letter received from Walter O. Snyder, Jr., airway extension superintendent of the bureau of lighthouses, department of commerce, in which Mr. Snyder highly complimented Atlanta's airport and classed it as one of the best in the country today.

Candler field has been Mr. Hartsfield's pet hobby ever since a couple of old jennies (commonly known as crates) inaugurated Atlanta's municipal airport several years ago, when it was then just a bare, wind-swept area of weed-grown land.

Atlanta was one of the first four or five cities in the country to start municipal airfields, and this city's airport has grown by leaps and bounds ever since. Today the airport stands as one of the best in the country, with a complete new lighting system for night flying, three hangars already built and another proposed, a municipal rest house, and a gas and oil service station for airplanes, together with one of the best landing fields in the country.

Mr. Snyder, in his report to the bureau, gave a full description of Candler field, showing that it is triangular in shape, consisting of 2,600 feet by 2,600 feet by 1,600 feet on the three sides, with the entire area available for landings. He inspected the airport on December 6.

Ruth St. Dennis, Ted Shawn Plan Sunday Audition

Public audition and reception by Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn, internationally prominent dancers and instructors announced for 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, December 18, in the ballroom of the Georgia Terrace hotel.

The famous couple, who will be seen here with "Ziegfeld Follies" at the Erlanger theater week of December 19, announce that they will receive all local dance students, their parents and friends as well as those interested in the art of dancing.

Miss St. Denis and Mr. Shawn are perhaps most noted, outside of their own dancing, for the numerous troupes of Denishawn Dancers, which have featured numerous editions of Ziegfeld Follies and other Broadway productions, and which have been trained in their own school in New York.

Much import is attached to the announcement of their audition, for, through numerous shows and contests staged under the sponsorship of The Constitution, Atlanta has become particularly widely known as possession an unusually large amount of dancing talent.

LAUNCH ALABAMA CLUB IN ATLANTA

A new Atlanta social club, to be known as the Alabama club, was organized Saturday night at a dinner at the Daffodil tea room, which assembled a group of young people who formerly lived in Alabama.

Officers elected were William Curtis Matthews, formerly of Selma, president; Francis LeMay, of Montgomery, vice president, and Miss Jeanette Blackstock, of Montgomery, secretary.

The new club will meet once a month, the next meeting to be held the second Saturday in January.

Divorce Granted.

Mrs. Mildred Howard-Cooper, daughter of Dr. H. C. Howard, of Emory university, was granted a total divorce, Friday, from Joseph M. Cooper, in DeKalb superior court, Judge Hutcheson presiding. The divorce was granted on the grounds of cruelty and no mention of alimony was made in the suit. The couple were married in October, 1921.

Adoption of 'Cow, Hog, Hen' Program Has Rehabilitated Wilkes' Financial Structure

"One-Crop" Plan Discarded, Farmers in Washington Sector Show Progress in Diversification.

Washington, Ga., December 10.—(Special.)—A few figures taken from the annual report of County Agent C. W. Wheeler just completed, set forth in a striking way the progress Wilkes county has made in 12 months towards farm diversification and financial rehabilitation.

For three years the trend has been definitely towards the dairy cows as the one best bet. The "cow, hog and hen' 'program, whereever it has been gievn a fair trial has justified the hopes of every farmer who has turned to it. So unfailing has the success of this program been in Wilkes county that farmers have come to the point of being classified thus: "John Jones, C-H2," being the formula for recording that John Jones is a farmer; that he has adopted the "cow, hog and hen" plan of diversification and is no longer a slave to the one crop idea. And it is usually the "C-H2" farmers who are "sawing the most wood" and making the most substantial progress while his neighbor does all the talking about "hard times" in recounting the woes of the cotton farmer whose neck is under the heel of the "Wall street speculator."

From December 1, 1926, to December 1, 1927, Wilkes county shipped $75,731 of sour cream and more than $25,000 worth of whole milk. Poultry sales in car lots during the year amounted to 51,273 pounds. The cash brought into the county from car lot sales alone amounted to $12,000 and this does not take into account the express shipments and peddler truck sales which will easily account for 15,000 pounds more. The final car lot sale of poultry for this year from Wilkes county will be held Tuesday, December 13, and will fill the farmer's pocketbook with Christmas cash and perhaps provide a nest-egg to start the new year auspiciously.

Interest in Hogs.

With the development of the dairy industry in Wilkes, increasing interest has been shown in hog-raising as a natural and profitable by-product. More hogs are to be found on Wilkes county farms today than ever before and this increased production will necessitate the inauguration of regular hog sales in carload lots during 1928, according to present indications.

A meeting of cream' producers of Wilkes, Lincoln and Taliaferro counties will be held in Washington Wednesday of next week to discuss plans for a cooperative creamery to be established here early in the new year. It will be the first cooperative creamery to be established in Georgia. Dr. J. Phil Campbell, of Athens, director of extension work for Georgia and M. H. Marlatt, creamery specialist, also from the State College of Agriculture, will meet with the farmers on that date to render every assistance possible in launching the new enterprise.

Coolidge Offered Place as Steel Leader, Report

New York, December 10.—(United News.)—President Coolidge has been offered the chairmanship of the United States Steel corporation and is carefully considering the offer, the New York Morning Telegraph will say in its Sunday edition.

Wall street bankers, according to the Telegraph's story, refuse to discuss the alleged offer, although in one or two cases bankers have been found who have heard the story from semi-official sources and give it considerable credence.

President Coolidge is understood to have received the offer through Dwight W. Morrow, United States ambassador to Mexico, and a former partner in J. P. Morgan & Co.; Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, and members of the Du Pont family, according to the Telegraph's story.

It will be mailed free to anyone who will send merely name and address to Sanborn Laboratories, 136 Sanborn Building, Battle Creek, Michigan. It describes the Sanborn home treatment and relates the experiences of men and women of national prominence who restored themselves to perfect health after other treatments had failed.

The book has 78 pages bound in board covers and is a mine of authentic information for those who are suffering from Diabetes.

CuredHisRupture

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation. If you write to me, Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 481-A Marcellus Ave., Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

MOFFAT TUNNEL WORK COMPLETED

Denver, December 10.—(AP)—The main bore of the Moffat tunnel, started four and a half years ago to reduce the mileage of transcontinental trains by piercing the continental divide was completed today.

The final blast in the work of increasing the central railroad tunnel to the necessary size of sixteen by twenty-four feet, was fired shortly before 4 o'clock this morning.

Crews working from the east and west slopes of the divide completed a small shaft through the almost granite encountered in the main bore, July 1, last. A pioneer, or parallel tunnel used to remove rock from the central shaft was finished last February when President Coolidge pressed a key in Washington to set off explosives removing a six-foot barrier.

Inauguration of train service will reduce the distance between here and Salt Lake by 173 miles. The estimated cost of the project is $18,000,000. The east portal is 9,085 feet above sea level and the western entrance 9,198 feet. The tunnel is approximately six miles in length and is about 3,900 feet below the crest of the divide.

David H. Moffat, pioneer western railroad builder, conceived the project nearly 30 years ago, but at the time of his death in 1911 he had been unable to secure sufficient financial backing to start construction.

MORROW RITES TODAY FOR REV. J. M. DE FOOR

Morrow, Ga., December 10.—(Special.)—Rev. J. M. DeFoor, widely known and beloved Baptist minister, who passed away here Friday after a long illness, will be laid to rest in the cemetery here Sunday, following funeral services which will be conducted from the Morrow Baptist church. Rev. W. F. Pate, pastor, will officiate.

Mr. DeFoor, who was 82 years of age at the time of his death, was stricken with paralysis five years ago, since which time he had lived with his son, J. B. DeFoor, of Morrow.

"Uncle Martin," as he was affectionately known among Georgia Baptists, was born in Fulton county and had lived in this section throughout his life. Ordained a minister at Dalton in 1870, he served a number of churches in Fulton, Rockdale and Clayton counties, and organized a number of others, including the Antioch Baptist church, of Atlanta, and the Hapeville Baptist church.

Among the churches which he served for long periods were the Mount Zion church and the Tanners church, both in Clayton county, which he served for 25 years, and the Rockdale church, of which he was pastor for 20 years.

Mr. DeFoor was a veteran of the war between the states, in which conflict he served with distinction in the Confederate army.

Mr. DeFoor married Miss Mary Anne Huie, who survives him. Other survivors are four sons, H. E. DeFoor, and J. B. DeFoor, of Morrow; J. M. DeFoor, Jr., of Birmingham, and R. T. DeFoor, of Atlanta, and two daughters, Mrs. J. R. Murphy, of Atlanta, and Mrs. W. F. Patterson.

Notables Attend Annual Awards Of Noble Prizes

Stockholm, Sweden, December 10.—(AP)—The annual distributions of Nobel prizes was made today with the customary ceremonial in the presence of the king, crown prince and other notables.

Recipients of this year's prizes included Professor Arthur Compton, of Chicago, who, with his wife and other members of his family, arrived here this morning for the ceremonies with the intention of leaving tonight for Hamburg, Paris and home in order to be in Chicago by Christmas.

Dr. Compton related while he was here that he had just returned to the United States from a trip abroad when his wife, while reading a newspaper on a train noticed the announcement of the honor conferred on him. He returned to Europe almost immediately for his diploma and share of the $32,478 check for the 1927 prize in physics awarded jointly to him and Professor Charles T. R. Wilson, of the University of Cambridge.

King Gustav handed out the diplomas and prizes to the award winners. The awards went to Dr. Compton, discoverer of the Compton process in connection with X-ray and radio activity; Professor Wilson for his method of observing electrified particles; Professor Johannes Fibiger, of Copenhagen, the 1926 award for his work in medicine; Grazia de Ledda, Italian novelist, and Professor J. Wagner-Jauregg, of Vienna, 1927 award in medicine.

The crown prince gave a banquet tonight in honor of the prize winners. King Gustav will give a similar dinner Sunday at the palace.

Big Tobacco Crop.

Cordele, Ga., December 10.—(AP)—A "good-sized" crop of tobacco is in prospect for Crisp county farmers next year, they report. A number of farmers have promised to increase acreage devoted to tobacco next year, despite the fact that they had a fairly successful season this year with cotton, corn, peanuts, potatoes and other products, they say.

SUIT OPPOSES SALE OF FLORIDA HIGHWAY

Jacksonville, Fla., December 10.—(AP)—Suit was filed in United States district court here today seeking to void the proposed sale of Connors highway, connecting Okeechobee and West Palm Beach, as provided by the Florida legislature in session earlier in the year.

The suit was filed for J. C. Clark, Richmond, Va., resident and Florida taxpayer, by his Jacksonville counsel.

It is directed against Ernest Amos, state comptroller; Connors Highway, Inc., a corporation of which W. J. Connors, Buffalo, N. Y., is president, and the members of the Connors Highway commission, authorized by the legislative session. The members of this commission are E. P. Green, J. H. Bayliss and I. E. Schilling, of the state road department; George B. Hills, Jacksonville engineer; Frank E. Lawrence, Okeechobee county engineer, and J. L. Cresap, state road department engineer.

Allegations in the suit seek to halt State Comptroller Amos from paying the sums of $100,000 next February, $300,000 in February, 1929, and sums later until 1932, on the grounds that the legislative action was unconstitutional.

The suit also asks that through temporary injunctions prayed to be made permanent after hearing, Amos be halted from drawing another warrant for $300,000 to pay salaries of members of the highway commission and to care for incidental expenses.

Alleged Bandit In Local Bank But Tiny Monk

The erudite Mr. Darwin's theory received some, or no sort of, boost Saturday morning when an escaped monker from an Edgewood avenue pet shop showed more or less human instincts when he pulled an impromptu raid on the Merchants and Mechanics bank on Pryor street, necessitating the quelling influence of fully a score of the city's constabulary ere the monk would relinquish his designs of banditry, if such they were, against the financial storehouse.

The manager of the bank appeared as usual Saturday morning to open his establishment, and as he opened the door, the monk, rudely enough, dashed in ahead of him at a thoroughly ungodly rate of speed.

Now, the murk of early morning, when one's eyes are yet but hardly open, is hardly conducive to correctness of vision. Consequently the subtle little monk appeared, no doubt, as some hoary monster of the jungle to the startled financier.

Accordingly he departed. That is the manager did. And the situation was relieved somewhat by the comforting presence of Lieutenant Buck Weaver, who, conveniently enough, came on his motorcycle.

Bank bandits! This presented, no doubt, an entertaining problem to the officer. Consequently, to share the romance of the particular situation with others of his brothers, he blew a series of sharp blasts upon his whistle.

The scurrying of feet broke the early morning air and soon almost a squadron of police were on the scene. They entered, and the bold bank bandit was discerned sitting nonchalantly on top of some file boxes.

After a chase around the interior of the bank, Officer Luther P. Higgins finally corralled the monk, and the animal accompanied him to the pet shop, and thus ended a sensational event for both the human-like pet and prosaic officers of the law.

BIG BAINBRIDGE MUSIC FESTIVAL DELAYED BY COLD

Bainbridge, Ga., December 10.—(Special.)—Bitter cold weather necessitated the postponement of the Festival of Music that had been planned for Friday night in the square. Rehearsals were held on the evening previous and everything was ready for the biggest open-air musical event in the history of Bainbridge, but it was felt that the weather was too frigid for an out-of-doors performance.

The occasion, which was being fostered by the chamber of commerce, will be given either on December 13 or December 20, depending upon weather conditions.

TEA "A LA AIRPLANE" VIRGINIA'S LATEST

Richmond, Va., December 10.—(AP)—"Tea a la aeroplane" is the latest innovation of society in the Old Dominion.

Tea brewed above the clouds with sandwiches in the shape of flying machines was the menu for the occasion when 12 prominent society women left the city in a 20-passenger cabin plane for a flight over Fredericksburg late today. The trip was to last approximately an hour.

Writers Pay Rare Tributes To Genius of A. L. Erlanger

New York, December 10.—(Special.)—Two unusual tributes to the ability and genius of A. L. Erlanger, head of the Erlanger theatrical interests, which extend to all parts of the United States, appeared recently in two big New York theatrical newspapers, it was revealed today. One was the reprinting in the Morning Telegraph of a story about the daily activity of Mr. Erlanger, written by Garnet Warren in the New York Herald, Sunday, July 18, 1909. The other is a personal tribute paid on the front page of "Zit's Weekly," written by Editor Zitzman himself.

A. L. ERLANGER.

In the reprinted story from the Herald Mr. Warren gives a comprehensive and close-up view of the theatrical magnate who is today one of the foremost amusement figures in the world. He spent an entire day with Mr. Erlanger, from the time he arose in the morning until he retired at night, and in his story relates the almost inconceivably large amount of work this theatrical man transacts in one day.

The story of the day's activity shows that Mr. Erlanger rises at 6 o'clock promptly every morning. In those days he took a ride on his horse through the parks prior to breakfast and after breakfast reached his office promptly at 9 o'clock.

Sat in Office.

Mr. Warren was permitted to sit in the office all day, watch every detail of the great theatrical business, hear every word of all conversations and was allowed to meet personally some of the foremost theatrical magnates, political leaders and financiers of that day. The story was reprinted to show that nearly 20 years later Mr. Erlanger still is as active, still as busy and still follows his ironclad office and living rules.

Such noted theatrical stars as Joe Weber, Max Rogers, Sam Harris, George M. Cohan, S. F. Nixon and Alderman "Big Tim" Sullivan, were received at the office that day, scores of big deals were handled, general directions were sent for the operation of big theatrical companies and theaters in many parts of the country and during all the day Mr. Erlanger never even seemed to weary, according to Mr. Warren.

The story also reveals many little personal traits of the magnate. It showed him at dinner, in conference with his business associates, in "kidding matches" with prominent actors, of his sharp and witty sayings, of his mastery of the epigram.

Concluding his story of the day of feverish activity, which is just a normal day with the magnate, Mr. Warren wrote:

Retired at 12:30.

"It was 11 o'clock at night when Mr. Erlanger reached his home, and there in his library, where is the most valuable private Napoleonic collection in the world, he talked history (particularly of the French revolutionary period) with a minute knowledge of it little less than extraordinary. Word portraits of famous historical characters were pictured, rare prints and medals and personal relics he showed with the thorough appreciation of the connoisseur. One does not need to talk for five minutes with him to know that that library, almost entirely historical, is read as well as possessed by him. And in that room in which we sat were treasures—the desk at which Napoleon worked, whole books containing the originals of his very personal letters, medallions, statues and personal relics—a collection which brings one so closely to that great figure in history as to be almost eerie. And here the dominating figure in theatrical affairs talked again of life and literature and the arts, all with a vivacity and solid knowledge staggering to one who had pictured him as a purely commercial figure without alloy. His conversation was animated, trenchant and once more epigrammatic.

"It was at half-past 12 that he retired, but I thought a little ere I went to sleep. Because the circumstances of the day were rather extraordinary. Here was a man with an exceptional range of interests—a man who (possibly the busiest in America) had engrafted to his day's work a physical course resembling Muldoon's—a man who had thrown the whole confidential workings of his business open to a stranger, and without restraint. It was enough to make one think. And then I cast about for some phrase which might reasonably describe him. I found it, and here deliberately set it down. He is a man with trained arms, trained legs, a trained body and a trained mind."

In the story in "Zit's Weekly," published nearly 20 years after the story by Mr. Warren, Mr. Erlanger is termed "fighter and master mind of the show world." Zit relates some incidents which occurred in his association with the showman which revealed, as he said, the loyalty and steadfastness in which Erlanger stuck by his friends.

The opening paragraphs of the article by "Zit" are as follows:

"To hell with his $50,000,000—and to hell with all his power and all the great titles that have been bestowed upon him—such as the king of the show business—the world's greatest showman—the Napoleon of the show business—because that has nothing to do with Abe Erlanger—that is all surrounding him.

"What in hell does all this money-power—and everything else count—if the foundation of the man personally is not there—to me—the heart of a man—the reputation of a man—the character of a man—the memory of a man—is far greater than anything else he may have—and Abe Erlanger has all that—tough he is—hard-boiled he is—rough he is—a fighter he is—and he possesses a tongue—that can lash harder than any whip can strike—but to those few in the world whom he likes—he is kind—helpful—and a staunch friend—and no hearsay—and only when one hurts him with a personal proved knowledge of the hurt—does he ever change.

"It is easier to obtain an audience with the president of the United States or his holiness the pope—or with any foreign ruler than to gain an audience with Abe Erlanger—for he only sees those he wants to see, and don't give a damn about seeing all those who want to see him—from the day he practically entered the show world he has been that way, and is that way today—if he likes you and does you a favor you cannot thank him—if he likes you and you write him for a favor—he says to his secretary (who brings him all his mail) who is that letter from and when he is told who the writer is—he remarks—give him what he wants—never mind what he asks."

100 MEXICAN REBELS ARE REPORTED SLAIN

Mexico City, December 10.—(AP)—One hundred "fanatical rebels," among them a priest named Cabral, were killed Thursday in a combat with federal forces, special dispatches from Guadalajara say. The fighting took place at Rancho Nuevo, near Nochixtlan, state of Jalisco.

The rebels were strongly entrenched behind stone fences near the highway. They opened fire when a federal column, commanded by General Avila Camacho, appeared. The combat lasted for two hours over a two mile front.

BRIAND-MUSSOLINI MEET PROTESTED

BY JOHN STEELE.

(Copyright, 1927, for The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

London, December 10.—It was reported in London that the reason for calling off the arranged meeting of Foreign Minister Aristide Briand of France and Premier Benito Mussolini of Italy, was the protest of the Jugo-Slavs. The Jugo-Slavs immediately made representations that it would not be playing the game as an ally if M. Briand met the Italian dictator, while the Italo-Albanian relations toward Jugo-Slavia are unsettled.

At the same time it was suggested that France might very well act as a mediator, offering Syria to Italy instead of Albania, and it is significant that already propaganda has been started in sections of the Paris press in favor of the transfer of Syria to Italy. It remains to be seen whether Italy would regard Syria as sufficient compensation for the loss of Albania.

Italian Crisis Indicated.

Confidential reports received in London indicate an approaching internal crisis in Italy. Premer Mussolini's rapid stabilization of the lira has upset the economic position and the workers especially are discontented because the reduced wage they have been forced to accept has been cut further by the increased prices of commodities. Most significant is the fact that many leading fascists, or rather men who had been fascists for material considerations, now are leaving the party.

Signor Ojetti, editor of Corriere de la Sera, a leading northern Italian newspaper, who was a fascist, has resigned and is said to be in disagreement with the present policy. Count Volpi, the finance minister, also is said to be on the point of resignation because he was denied the Paris embassy, to which he aspires. Premier Mussolini is reported to be depressed and at a loss to find a solution to the crisis.

France-Russ Pact.

At the other end of Europe it is reported that the closest relations are being established between France and Russia. During the conversations in Geneva between M. Briand and Maxim Litvinoff, Russian under-secretary of foreign affairs, a security pact on comfortable league principles was discussed and M. Litvinoff even suggested in case such an agreement was concluded, Russia was willing to enter the league. He also spoke for France's good offices for the formation of a similar pact between Russia and Poland.

RAILROADS LOSE 'BIGGEST LAW SUIT'

St. Louis, Mo., December 10.—(AP) The railroads' convention for valuation on basis of cost of reproduction was given a new blow today when a special court of three federal judges upheld the valuation of the St. Louis & O'Fallon railroad as fixed by the interstate commerce commission largely on the basis of original cost.

This was a test case involving a difference of more than $10,000,000,000 in the valuation of the nation's railroads. The opinion was written by Circuit Judge Kimbrough Stone and concurred in by Circuit Judge Arba S. Van Valkenburgh and District Judge C. B. Fais.

Called "Biggest Lawsuit."

The case has been called "the biggest lawsuit in history" because of its acceptance by both the interstate commerce commission and the railroads as test of the principles and methods to be employed in valuation of all the railroads of the country, both for the purpose of rate making and for the recapture by the federal government of one-half of excess earnings above 6 per cent.

The railroads contended the valuation varied from $865,000 to $978,000 during the three years for which it sought to recapture excess earnings totaling $225,000.

Judge Stone held that neither the question of value nor the methods for ascertaining value need be passed on because, even accepting the railroad's claim of value, its earnings for the years in question ranged from 6.97 per cent to 8.71 per cent, and hence no confiscation of property could be claimed by the road. Therefore, he held, the commission's order is "not open to attack upon the ground of wrongful valuation."

Railroad Contention Denied.

Rejecting the railroad's contention that the dominant element of value was reproduction new, Judge Faris said:

"A valuation arrived at by the sole use of either the prudent investment theory bottomed upon cost when constructed, or upon the theory of the present cost of reproduction new, less depreciation, would work presently to the public, and eventually to the carriers themselves, such monstrous inequity as to preclude wholly the use of either of such methods exclusively and eliminate the notion that congress contemplated the exclusive use of either of such methods."

"Therefore," he continued, "the value of the physical properties of a common carrier under the recapture provisions of the interstate commerce act ought to be the net result of expert opinion, reasonably and honestly exercised."

Judge Van Valkenburgh concurred in the decision without comment.

EXPENSIVE AUTO AND LIQUOR LOAD TAKEN BY POLICE

Fifteen gallons of liquor, one gallon of home brew and an expensive car were confiscated and two men were jailed early Saturday night when city police began an intensive war on rum running into the city before the Christmas holiday orders are completed. The catch was made by Patrolmen H. D. Donehoo and J. A. Etheridge at Powell and East Fair streets, following a collision between the liquor car and another, driven by O. N. Mann, of 1415 Woodbine street.

The liquor car, according to police, was driven by Neal Cook, of Hapeville, who was attempting to escape capture by the officers when he collided with Mann's car. Both cars were considerably damaged and Mann, Cook and J. J. Thomas, of East Point, who was riding with Cook, were severely shaken up and bruised.

Both Cook and Thomas were jailed and are being held at police station for violation of the prohibition laws.

Last Year's Toys Can Make

LITTLE HOUSE IN HOWARD THEATER LOBBY IS READY

1,000 Atlanta Kiddies Happy

A place for those last year's toys, is this house in the lobby of the Howard theater. It was placed there by the Better Films committee. The toys of another year, which brought their pleasure once, will again bring joy to 1,000 young hearts this Christmas. Dig them out from their hiding places and drop them in the house for less fortunate children than yours.

There's nothing quite like the smile of a kiddie at Christmas morning. And there's nothing more heart-rending than the wee, pathetic sob of a little one whom Santa Claus has passed by.

Now, this isn't a pretentious plea. It isn't for a single cent in money that the Empty Stocking fund of the Better Films committee is asking. The committee has installed a small house in the lobby of the Howard theater, and they're asking merely for the toys of last Christmas, of the Christmas of years ago, for their "1,000 Children's Day."

During the year, teachers in 55 Atlanta public schools have been studying conditions among the children in their schools. Most of them are fortunate—salaried fathers, bright, cheerful homes.

But some of them . . . are not.

Every attic tells a story of bygone days. The children have outgrown those toys.

Dig them out. Bundle them up, books, toys, clothing and anything else that has been rendered useless to you in the rush of time, and bring them down to the Howard for these 1,000 children.

That's a little thing, isn't it.

Not one cent. Of course, if you're single, if you're a bachelor and still want to help, then a check slipped into the little house would bring inestimable joy on Christmas to someone.

But the thrown-away toys and books will fill the need.

So, when you come down town this week to shop daily for those you love, think of those who have nothing.

And it'll mean so little to you.

TO LET CONTRACTS ON NEW EQUIPMENT FOR CITY SCHOOLS

New school equipment contracts will be awarded Tuesday afternoon at the regular monthly meeting of the city board of education. The equipment is for use in a large number of schools, and the contracts are expected to total more than $100,000.

Bids were opened at a recent meeting of the board, and have been tabulated by the school authorities for presentation to the board meeting.

WELFARE WORKER WILL BE SOUGHT IN WILKES COUNTY

Plans to wage a campaign to raise $5,000 to employ an all-time welfare worker in Wilkes county were reported to the state board of public welfare Saturday. In announcing the plans as reported, Miss Rhoda Kaufman, secretary, made public the following statement:

"Wilkes county takes a progressive step in organizing its welfare work. At a meeting held in Washington this week representatives from the county and city administration, the local churches, the Kiwanis club, the Woman's club and American Legion organized the Wilkes County Welfare association. Through this association the public and private agencies of the entire county are uniting in an effort to more intelligently and helpfully handle the many appeals for aid which are constantly coming to them. Realizing that these needy families should be helped to self-help and that such service requires the full time of a skilled and trained worker, the association unanimously decided to put on during the last ten days of January a drive for $5,000 to cover the salary of such a worker, her transportation over the county and a relief fund.

"According to Richard Stilwell, field agent of the state board of public welfare, who was asked by community leaders to come in, survey the needs of the community and recommend to them how to meet these needs, the leaders and citizens of Wilkes county deserve the highest commendation for the splendid spirit with which they are joining forces to overcome their problems in welfare. To make every possible effort to adjust and help dependent and delinquent children; to help keep children in school and to help needy families to be, as far as is possible, self-supporting, are some of the objectives of the association and to this end the county is working whole-heartedly together.

"The drive will be launched with a mass meeting on January 22 and the association hopes to have its welfare worker on the job by February 1, 1928.

I'll Tell the World

I've Got SOMETHING TO CROW ABOUT

Listen to Me!

I'll Do It Or Bust

I'm Going to Sell $25.00 Overcoats for $13.50 All Are Silk Lined

I just made up my mind that I'll be the overcoat king of Atlanta or bust. When I registered at the Prince George hotel the other day in New York, I heard the room clerk tell the cashier: "That's Metcalf, the hat king of Atlanta." It kinder tickled me; and I thought to myself, "I can be the overcoat king, 'cause I sure do own a thousand overcoats for less than the cost of the cloth."

Now, you know and I know that this king business sometimes costs a fellow his head, and in my case it's goner cost me my profit, but what's a little profit? My living is already made, and now I'm looking for something bigger—big business, for instance. I wouldn't be tied up with any old, slow business even if I got rich at it. I'm just like a nigger riding a bicycle—I either goes on or I goes off.

So I'll tell you what I'll do MONDAY. I am gettin' sick of seeing so many fellows pass my store with that old last year's shirttail overcoat, or else no overcoats at all that I'm goner dress 'em up for less "jack" than anybody's ever done it before.

You got to read my coupon below to see what I'm talkin' 'bout, and when you read it, get your shears and cut the darned thing out and get the best of me. You know I'm Scotch and you don't get a whack at a Scotchman often. But there ain't no fool like an old fool, and I'm goner do it once—or BUST.

HERE'S THE COUPON

This coupon and $9.99 (Nine Ninety-Nine) will buy any $13.50 to $16.50 silk-lined topcoat or overcoat in our store Monday, December 12th.

You pick out the coat, hand the salesman this coupon and $9.99 in cash, and the coat is yours. You carry it home and keep it till Christmas Eve, and if you'd rather have a $10 gold piece than the overcoat, bring it back to us and get the money Xmas Eve.

Now don't come in here Monday talkin' 'bout leavin' the coupon home, 'cause there'll be NOTHIN' DOIN'. I'm goner find out Monday who's readin' my ads.

EVERY OTHER HOUSEWIFE

If two or three women were to say that they preferred Calumet to other brands of baking powder, you possibly would not be deeply impressed. You might think that their choice was swayed by little personal likes and dislikes, or that they were not well posted on the subject of leaveners. But, if out of millions of housewives, every other one were to tell you that she employed Calumet you would immediately decide that it must possess exceptional merit, because it would be utterly impossible for so many to be mistaken in their judgment.

CALUMET THE WORLD'S GREATEST BAKING POWDER

MAKES BAKING EASIER

The publishers of a leading woman's magazine asked a vast number of housewives, picked at random, what brand of baking powder they used. The canvass showed that

56% USE CALUMET THE WORLD'S GREATEST BAKING POWDER

44% USE Other Brands

Think of that. More Calumet is used than of all the other brands combined. There must be a sound reason why this is so. There is—Calumet is the world's biggest selling baking powder because it deserves to be.

LESS THAN 1¢ PER BAKING

DOUBLE ACTING

There are many reasons why millions do use Calumet. Some like it because of its absolute purity; some because of its great economy; some because it gives best results, finer, lighter, better tasting bakings; others prefer it because it is so dependable; and many use it because it is double acting, meaning as you know that it contains two leavening units; one begins to work when the dough is mixed; the other waits for the heat of the oven, then both units work together.

So, regardless of what your baking needs or desires may be, you will find that Calumet meets every one of them. You may specialize in fine pastries, or bake for exhibition purposes; you may want to give your family more healthful and nourishing foods; or perhaps reduce living costs; or get rid of baking worries — you will have your wish gratified through the use of Calumet. Try it and you will surely say "That is my idea of an ideal baking powder."

GENERAL DEBATE HURRIED IN HOUSE

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—General debate on the tax bill was hurried forward in the house today with leaders hopeful that when the measure is taken up again Monday members would be ready to proceed with its consideration under rules permitting the offering of amendments.

The discussion today touched upon practically all phases of the tax question, a number of members defending the bill as drafted by the house ways and means committee and others vigorously attacking certain of its proposals.

Hawley Supports Bill.

Representative Hawley, of Oregon, senior republican committee member, took an active part in supporting the measure, arguing that its proposal to reduce the tax rate on corporation incomes from 13 1-2 to 11 1-2 per cent would benefit two-thirds of the wage earners in the country.

The Oregon member cautioned against taking action that might cause a deficit in the treasury.

Representative Oldfield, of Arkansas, a democratic committee member, charged that republican politics had prevented inclusion in the bill of provisions aimed to increase efficiency in administraton of the tax law.

"This was done," he added, "to save some republican job holders out in the states."

Corporation Tax Plea.

Declaring that the crux of the tax question is disposition of the treasury surpluses, Representative Jacobstein, democrat, New York, urged that money in the treasury at the end of the present fiscal year which is not needed for national expenses be partially devoted to a further reduction of the corporation tax.

Representative Chindblom, republican, Illinois, said the large corporation tax cut was justified because so many stockholders would benefit. He flatly opposed any larger tax exemption for married persons in the lower brackets, saying that even the present $3,500 exemption was too high.

CONFIDENT SERENITY MARKS NEW CONGRESS.

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Belying momentarily the signs and portents that have forecast a session torn by legislative and political storm, the new congress ended its first week tonight wearing an air of confident serenity.

While the senate was taking a day off, the house opened its Saturday's deliberations in a spirit of perfect fellowship by greeting and honoring Colonel Lindbergh. Gathered in unexpectedly from a nearby corridor, blushing and almost overwhelmed, the ace of aviators was welcomed at an informal reception at the speaker's rostrum, and unanimously voted a congressional medal of honor. Then the members returned to the tax reduction bill, now passing through the earlier, duller stages of its legislative journey, and occupied the remainder of the day exchanging statistics across the party aisle.

Many Members Missing.

A good part of the house missed the colonel and the tax debate that followed his exit. Working under rules that required only 100 of the 435 members for a quorum, the leaders frequently would have found even less than the requisite number on hand if they really had counted noses. Many such Saturday afternoons are used by members to catch up with work at their offices, and regular week-end trips to their homes have not been unknown among representatives who live in nearby states.

But if there was little agitation on the surface as the week came to its end, there was plenty of dynamite underneath. The new congress now has technically before it all of those legislative subjects which will furnish the fighting points of the session. The McNary-Haugen bill, in slightly different form, came back to the senate's waiting list yesterday with Senator McNary's name again affixed to it and the Curtis-Crisp bill of last session again was presented today in the house. Appropriations and taxes already are in the process of actual consideration, and the flood relief problem is just around the corner. A "Missouri plan" for flood control was added to the calendar today when Representative Dyer put in a bill like that presented yesterday by his fellow resident of St. Louis, Senator Hawes, proposing appropriation of a round billion dollars in place of the less than $300,000,000 suggested by President Coolidge.

Troubles in Senate.

The senate's household troubles, which have provided several days of debate thus far, have only reached the stage of an armistice. Today the Reed slush fund committee met and prepared to fight all over again the question of admitting Vare and Smith to senatorships. A contest over some places on the slate of senate officials also is threatened, and the new committee which is to inquire into certain Mexican government appropriations, alleged to have been destined for the pockets of United States senators, is drawing up subpoenas for witnesses to be heard next week.

But the goddess of political harmony may take heart in the circumstances that the Lindbergh medal-of-honor proposal, approved today by the house, is likely to be the first actual legislative project to pass the seventieth congress. This is one bill against which no senate filibuster is expected.

DOCTOR DESCRIBES TRIP TO SAVE BOY

over fair stretches and slowing to a walk on steeper climbs and in deep loose snow (in places the drifts were 10 feet deep) we were over the first lap of 35 miles in less than three hours.

Our team was tired from the rough hard going of the bad places. The dogs' feet were bleeding. But not a dog was willing to quit. We really had put on too much speed over the first lap of what proved the easiest part of the journey. A piece of blanket I had worn for protection was torn off, and my heavy whipcord breeches were worn out entirely on both hips. This was due to the scraping of the light sled against icy snow banks. Those trousers looked as though someone had been shooting through them with a sawed off shotgun.

Pick Up New Dogs.

But I borrowed a heavier pair from Andy Casner at Bergdorf Springs. And after hot coffee with a touch of brandy I kept on. At the springs I had only two of the original team. Fifteen miles farther on, at Warren, we picked up two additional dogs, and two expert snowshoe men, Brad Carey and Bill Roden.

We were carried across the next ten miles by mule team. This was made possible by shallow snow. We were helped by Dan Levan, the wildest of mule skinners, and 20 more willing horse and snowshoe men who met us by relays. They fed us and pushed us on, and by Monday afternoon we were heading toward Elk Summit, 10,000 feet up and usually a stormy spot.

Brad Carey was now my guide. A better one, or a more considerate and faithful helper in an emergency, never lived. Stover waited behind, caring for his wornout dogs at Bergdorf. The driving was becoming strictly my job as the most rigorous part of the journey approached.

Two Help Break Trail.

My good physical condition came into service as we plodded up through the snow, sending the dogs and sled ahead of us. We all followed Carey, who with young Roden, broke our trail.

It was snowing and the snow fell harder and harder as the ascent grew stiffer and the snow already fallen deeper.

Old John Routson, the father of the boy I was on the way to see, was with us. Years ago he could snowshoe with any man. But as darkness and the wind increased John weakened.

"Go on, boys," he cried, "I'm afraid I can't make it."

Nevertheless he tried desperately to follow us. But as he fell back and faded away in the storm and the blackness, my emotion almost got me. It was one of those occasions when a man could cry—but in the end shuts his mouth tight and keeps going.

Hit Summit of Mountain.

Finally we hit the top of Elk summit. The terrific wind gave so vicious a roar and push that the crest, about 50 feet wide, held us less than forty seconds. We jammed men, dogs, sled and all into a huddled bunch, sort of scrambling, grabbing at each other and at the terrified dogs. The gale blew us exactly in the direction we were heading for; it swept us off that thin ridge of snow-covered ice into banks of loose, drifted snow. We found ourselves in a tangle of men, dogs and harness.

Keeping on, still breaking our own trail, we reached the Independence mine. Every man and every dog was happy that our highest summit had been passed. Our goal lay only 12 miles farther on.

Someone produced a flask. I don't know who did it. That never leaked out. And then, to our amazement, John Routson came faltering in. He was weak, but game. He had followed our beaten trail more easily than he had been able to help break it with the dogs.

Leave Routson Behind.

Our party struck out now with greater energy, almost with ferocity. Soon we left John Routson behind us again. We hated to do it, but we had confidence in his knowledge of the hills. We felt certain of his ultimate safety.

We plunged on down the canyon, and very, very slowly wallowed through the drifts mile after mile.

Two or three hours before I had had to discard my bear paws, or snow shoes, the sled had been all that kept me on top of the snow trail. And now we saw the lights of the Wordenoff mine, where John Routson's boy lay ill. Just as I saw their first flicker my team scraped swiftly under a fallen tree, one of many, for we were in heavy timber, and one of my ears looks like raw hamburger steak as the result. Possibly a little frost bite has something to do with this.

But we got to the mine and we got to Emmett Routson. The boy has rallied and for 15 hours has gained steadily. To all of us, that has made up for whatever hardship the journey may have brought us.

Let me say right here what I owe to the men who helped me. They have a do-or-die spirit in the mountains. Without these lads and their perfect coordination in meeting me with relays, keeping my feet from freezing and lungs from giving out, it would have been a physical impossibility for me to reach this boy at the Dordenoff mine.

Handicapped as we were, mainly by lack of time for preparation, the feat accomplished by both men and dogs was one not to be expected. They got me over these mountains in unprecedented time.

And if Emmett Routson continues on to recovery, the thanks are due to the men who got me to his side.

HISTORY OF GIRL BANDIT IS TRACED

fense went back before Rebecca's birth 22 years ago. Dr. W. C. Lackey, of Fort Worth, testified that her parents were "strange." He described Becky's mother as a hysterical woman.

"When she wanted to keep Becky from doing anything she would throw a fit of hysterics," Doctor Lackey testified.

Then he described the girl's life.

When a small child, she had a severe attack of bronchial pneumonia. She was unconscious for days. She recovered slowly and was taken to California.

"Later she apparently recovered," the doctor said. "But her posture was not the same. Her back and neck were stiff. She would stand like a frightened animal ready to jump any minute. At times she would greet us pleasantly. At others she would not recognize me."

Dr. Lackey declined to call himself an alienist but admitted having had experience with mental cases.

"In my opinion she is suffering from some form of depressing insanity," he declared.

As the family history was being recited, Becky sat looking stolidly forward. Her husband, Otis Rogers, who is also one of the seven attorneys representing her, reached back from his chair at times and rested his hand upon the arm of the lonely little figure behind him.

LIGHT YOUR TREES FOR HAPPY YULETIDE

lights connected from the front porch light will be approved by the city electrical department for temporary service, provided the load is not over 1,000 watts. It will take 40 of the 25-watt lamps to create this load. An indefinite number of tiny indoor Christmas bulbs may be used.

In case of rainy weather, it will be necessary to disconnect these lights if special weather-proof sockets have not been used. It will be possible to make use of several of the Christmas stringers on one feeder cord, the multiple connection being made at the tree, the duplex cord extending from tree to porch.

And you don't even have to know anything about wiring the trees. Names of Boy Scouts who have had electrical training and will wire trees may be obtained from Camp Fire headquarters, Walnut 3211, or if you prefer, any electrical company will serve you.

League Decides.

Already, the Ansley Park Civic league has decided to make of its section, with the beautiful and well-kept homes, evergreens and terraces, a huge Christmas fairyland.

The idea, originated here by the Camp Fire Girls, has been adopted by various civic organizations over the entire country, and there's no reason why the Gate City of the south should'nt be made just about the most beautiful place in the entire country around Christmas time.

So, figure out your own plans for lighting your living trees and then write 'em out and address them to The Constitution, care of the Christmas Tree Editor.

For beauty's sake, that's all.

1914 have the frontier posts been so heavily manned as they are at the present time. New forts and systems of forts are being built, and their artillery equipment is kept a dark secret. There have been a dozen espionage trials in the various countries in the last two or three years, not counting the recent wholesale nition factories in soviet Russia. Munition factories are working double and in some countries treble shifts. One knife factory recently began work on an order for a million and a half bayonets. Military budgets constantly rise.

"In spite of Locarno and all manner of friendly assurances, the air is charged with dread and apprehension throughout the continent," says Senator Maurras, leader of an ultra-conservative group in France. Maurras wrote "Kiel and Tangier," a book in which the alignment of the powers during the late war and its outcome were foreshadowed.

M. Briand signs a treaty and Mussolini's brother, Arnado, who edits the family paper, openly charges France thereupon with arming Jugo-Slavia against Italy. The Russians have for months been filling the air with their lamentations that all Europe is being aligned against them in one solid military league. Their answer is 1,800,000 men under arms and a brand new escadrille of swift fighting planes that bear the collective title of "Our Reply."

Marshal Foch puts the next war for 1935, because at that time a great change will come in international relations. According to the treaty of Versailles, France must withdraw her last man from the Rhineland then. French manpower will that year also have dwindled to its lowest ebb, due to the decline of births in the war years, 1914-1919. The marshal calls it significant that Signor Mussolini has expressed the hope that Italy will have 5,000,000 men in the active army and in the reserves that very year.

Warning From Rolland.

Another figure, not a warrior, but a thinker and philosopher and by many considered the greatest European of our time, Romain Rolland, whither he withdrew during the last war, that Europe is heading for another frightful blood bath.

Rolland, moreover, is wholly disinterested. He is not planning a political campaign, like Lloyd George, for instance, who recently scored the record of Sir Austen Chamberlain by saying that the British foreign secretary had been standing like a stork on one leg on the shore of Locarno, thereby suggesting that the present British government's work for world peace had come to a standstill. The little Welshman went even further. He also saw war clouds gathering above Europe.

"Ten million men are under arms," he said. "The way we are going now, war tomorrow is a certainty. Nothing can stave it off. The devil's vat is bubbling, ready to boil over. A mere spark will set the continent aflame."

H. G. Wells agrees with the British liberal leader.

In the Balkans, Macedonia is once more the sore spot and the cause of bitter rivalry between Serbs and Bulgars. Frontier incidents of guards killed by raiding parties, villages put to the torch by irregular troops, are an almost weekly occurrence.

"This is a mere prelude of a greater struggle," says Maxin. Gorki. "They are the catspaws; the big actors who will pull the strings of Europe. The one backs Bulgaria and the other Jugo-Slavia. They only wait for the moment when they can come out in the open with some grandiose slogan of right and justice and they will be at each other's throats once more."

library serves, have increased from one in 1902 to 26 in 1927; the main library, nine branch libraries, and 16 schools where classroom libraries are placed in 84 grades. More than 9,000,000 books for home reading have been issued in the past five years; in addition to this home reading service hundreds of thousands of readers have been served within the building and hundreds more have had the information service of the library brought to their desks by telephone, the report states.

During the year, 34,089 persons were served in the reference department and 2,193 received information over the telephone. Special reading lists compiled over this period reached 564 and material for 264 debates were furnished in 1927.

The periodical room of the library was in great demand throughout the year, more than 85,560 persons being on attendance. The membership of the library increased 10,764 during the year, these new members not having been members before. At the main library there are 402,649 books for home circulation. The following figures give the number of books for home circulation in the various branches: Anne Wallace branch, 36,690; Oakland City, 19,914; Uncle Remus, 44,999; South branch, 62,161; Inman Park, 76,544; English avenue, 55,088; Stewart avenue, 29,543; school deposits, 43,491; Auburn, 16,386; B. Washington High, 13,390. Total, 800,755.

Quarters Outgrown.

Miss Barker sets out in the report that there are five obvious facts which confront the library at the close of its first 25 years. They are: The outgrowing of the main library building; inadequate appropriation for maintenance; low scale of compensation for employees; need for branch library buildings and small book collection.

Corners of the reading rooms of the main library have been cut off for working quarters; floor shelving for books occupies space intended for readers; and the storage space for the shelving of books is so crowded that the books cannot be kept in any kind of suitable order, many of them being completely out of reach except through use of step-ladders, she asserts. In the 25 years of the library's existence, the city has spent less than $24,000 on library buildings.

An appropriation of $25,000 would extend the book storage room to the full depth of the library's lot and would equip the space with the necessary steel bookshelving. This addition would relieve the congestion that now exists and would lessen the tremendous handicap under which the state now endeavors to serve an ever-increasing public, Miss Barker points out.

In referring to the inadequate appropriation, the library has for all purposes in 1927, service books and operating expenses of 48 cents per capita and the circulation of books during this period averaged 3.5 per capita. The library had a gift of 2,000 volumes during the year and the books are still stored as there had been no available person assigned to the work of classifying and cataloguing the books, the report sets out.

Work Increases Greatly.

Comparing the increase of work of the library and the number on the staff in the last five years, according to Miss Barker, shows where the burden is falling. In 1923, the library lent 582,850 volumes for home reading; in 1927, 800,755 volumes, and in 1923 the staff consisted of 28 members and in 1927, 33 members. The volume of work, based on the circulation of books alone, has increased 37 per cent and the number on the staff has increased 18 per cent in five years. Of the five librarians added in five years, two were to take care of additional hours of opening, and cannot properly be called additional help for the normal increase in work.

A scale of salaries that prevail in other cities of Atlanta's class was attached to the report and shows that Atlanta's librarians are receiving considerably less in salary.

The library is not in a position to limit the demand made on it by readers to the number that it can serve and no one can be turned away, though many go away feeling that they have not had the help that they had a right to expect. This condition prevails at the Uncle Remus branch and the Inman Park branch, Miss Barker reports.

Uncle Remus Branch.

The Uncle Remus branch still occupies the one small room in the J. C. Harris home offered in 1913 as a small distributing center for books. In the year 1914, 8,261 volumes were lent and during 1927 in those same quarters 44,999 books were issued.

At Inman Park more than 10,000 books were issued during 1927, the circulation being the largest, by a good many thousands, of any of the branch libraries.

The library has a total book collection of 164,873 volumes distributed among its 26 agencies, with a circulation of more than 800,000 volumes, the wear and tear on the books is such that the net gain in volumes is reduced to a small figure, in fact, at one of the branches, when the final balancing was made at the end of the year, it was found that more books had been discarded as worn out than had been purchased.

The people of Atlanta are aware of books as a source of inspiration, information and recreation and they are constantly demanding a fuller measure of service from their public library, the agency maintained by them for bringing to all the people the books that belong to them, and the service that is now being given by the library deserve a fuller measure of support from the city, Miss Barker contended, in wages.

AGREEMENT MADE IN CHICAGO STREET CAR CONTROVERSY

Chicago, December 10.—(AP)—A holiday tie-up of Chicago's surface and elevated lines was averted today when representatives of the unions and the railway companies decided to continue operations under the original arbitration agreement previously approved by the federal court.

The agreement was reached late today at conference in the chamber of Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson with presidents of the railways, local and national officers of the unions and Mayor William Hale Thompson in attendance.

The decision set aside previous plans of the unions which had voted to strike on December 15 unless granted a 15 cents an hour increase

Camp Fire Girls Are Pirates

Pirate with pleasing personalities, if you can imagine such a thing about a pirate, are these members of the O Wakica Camp Fire group of the Girls' High school, who put on a "Pirate's Fair" Saturday between the hours of 12 noon and 8 o'clock at 6 West Peachtree. The proceeds go toward the building of a cabin at their camp at Toccoa Falls, Ga. The young ladies made many of the exhibits and everything was pirate-like even to the parrot and monkey. Reading from left to right in the front row are Nanine Jack, Gladys Pratt, Maryon McWaters, Olivia Harris and Virginia Pair and in the back row are Frances Kohler, Eleanor Davis, Mary Zachary and Betty Kniskern.

BARGAIN BASEMENT

LAST RITES TODAY FOR ALEX C. BRUCE

Funeral services for Alexander Campbell Bruce, 92, pioneer citizen of Atlanta, who died early Saturday at his residence, 1271 Fairview road, will be held this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the First Christian church. The Rev. C. R. Stauffer, pastor, will officiate and interment will be in Oakland cemetery. Elders of the church will serve as an honorary escort.

Mr. Bruce was the father of W. H. Bruce, treasurer of the Atlanta Terminal company, and had been a resident of the city since 1879. Soon after moving here he became a member of the firm of Parkins & Bruce, architects. In 1885 the firm became Bruce & Morgan. Mr. Bruce retired from active business life in 1905, but prior to that time had been one of the city's most prominent architects.

He was a member of the Masonic lodge and senior elder of the First Christian church.

In addition to his son, he is survived by a daughter, Mrs. B. F. Cobb; a sister, Miss Mary V. Bruce; a granddaughter, Mrs. A. J. Bohn, and a great-grandson. H. M. Patterson & Son will be in charge.

ACCIDENTAL SHOT FINALLY FATAL TO HUBERT KIRK

Hubert Kirk, 13, of 65 Alamo avenue, who was shot accidentally Friday by a playmate who was handling an "unloaded" revolver, died early Saturday morning at Grady hospital from the effects of the wound in his head. Funeral services will be held at 1:30 o'clock this afternoon from the residence, and the body will be carried to Roswell for interment.

While playing together Friday afternoon, the Kirk boy and Earl Puckett, of 72 Alamo avenue, found an automatic pistol belonging to Mr. Puckett, the magazine having been removed, according to a report by Captain A. J. Holcombe and Call Officers McCrary and Brown. Jack Puckett thought the gun to be unloaded and pulled the trigger, the gun firing with the cartridge left in the breach, and the Kirk boy falling wounded, police were told.

Young Kirk is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Kirk; a brother, Ralph Kirk; a sister, Vivian Kirk; and a grandmother, Mrs. Nora Kirk. Awtry & Lowndes are in charge of the funeral arrangements.

Three Tech Men Picked by Hawkins on All-Southern Team

Pund, Mizel And Drennon On Star Team

Nash and McCrary Represent Bulldogs; Squad of 22 Men Selected.

BY DICK HAWKINS.

They say that any all-something-or-other football team is a lot of hooey and guess work. They say no man is qualified to pick an all-anything team without making mistakes in his selections. All of which we grant without argument and as a preface to this story about our all-conference team which is pictured in this section.

For nearly a generation, the greatest indoor sport of sports writers has been the selection of an all-something team and the result has always been a heap of argument and a growing conviction on the part of these same sports writers that at best the all-something team is just a careful guess—the public did not have to be convinced of this fact.

During this same generation the game of football has changed so materially that any writer who attempts to select an all-star team must change his perspective with the changes in the game. Years ago the experts used to pick the best individual player in each position—according to their opinion—and throw 11 names together in a mythical team.

That is not being done now in the same manner. Some sports writers are still picking their teams by the "all-star" route but many are trying to select their teams with the view to efficiency of the mythical team in case that team were called upon to perform in the field. Our idea of an all-conference team is one that in our opinion could go on the field and beat any team picked by any other man

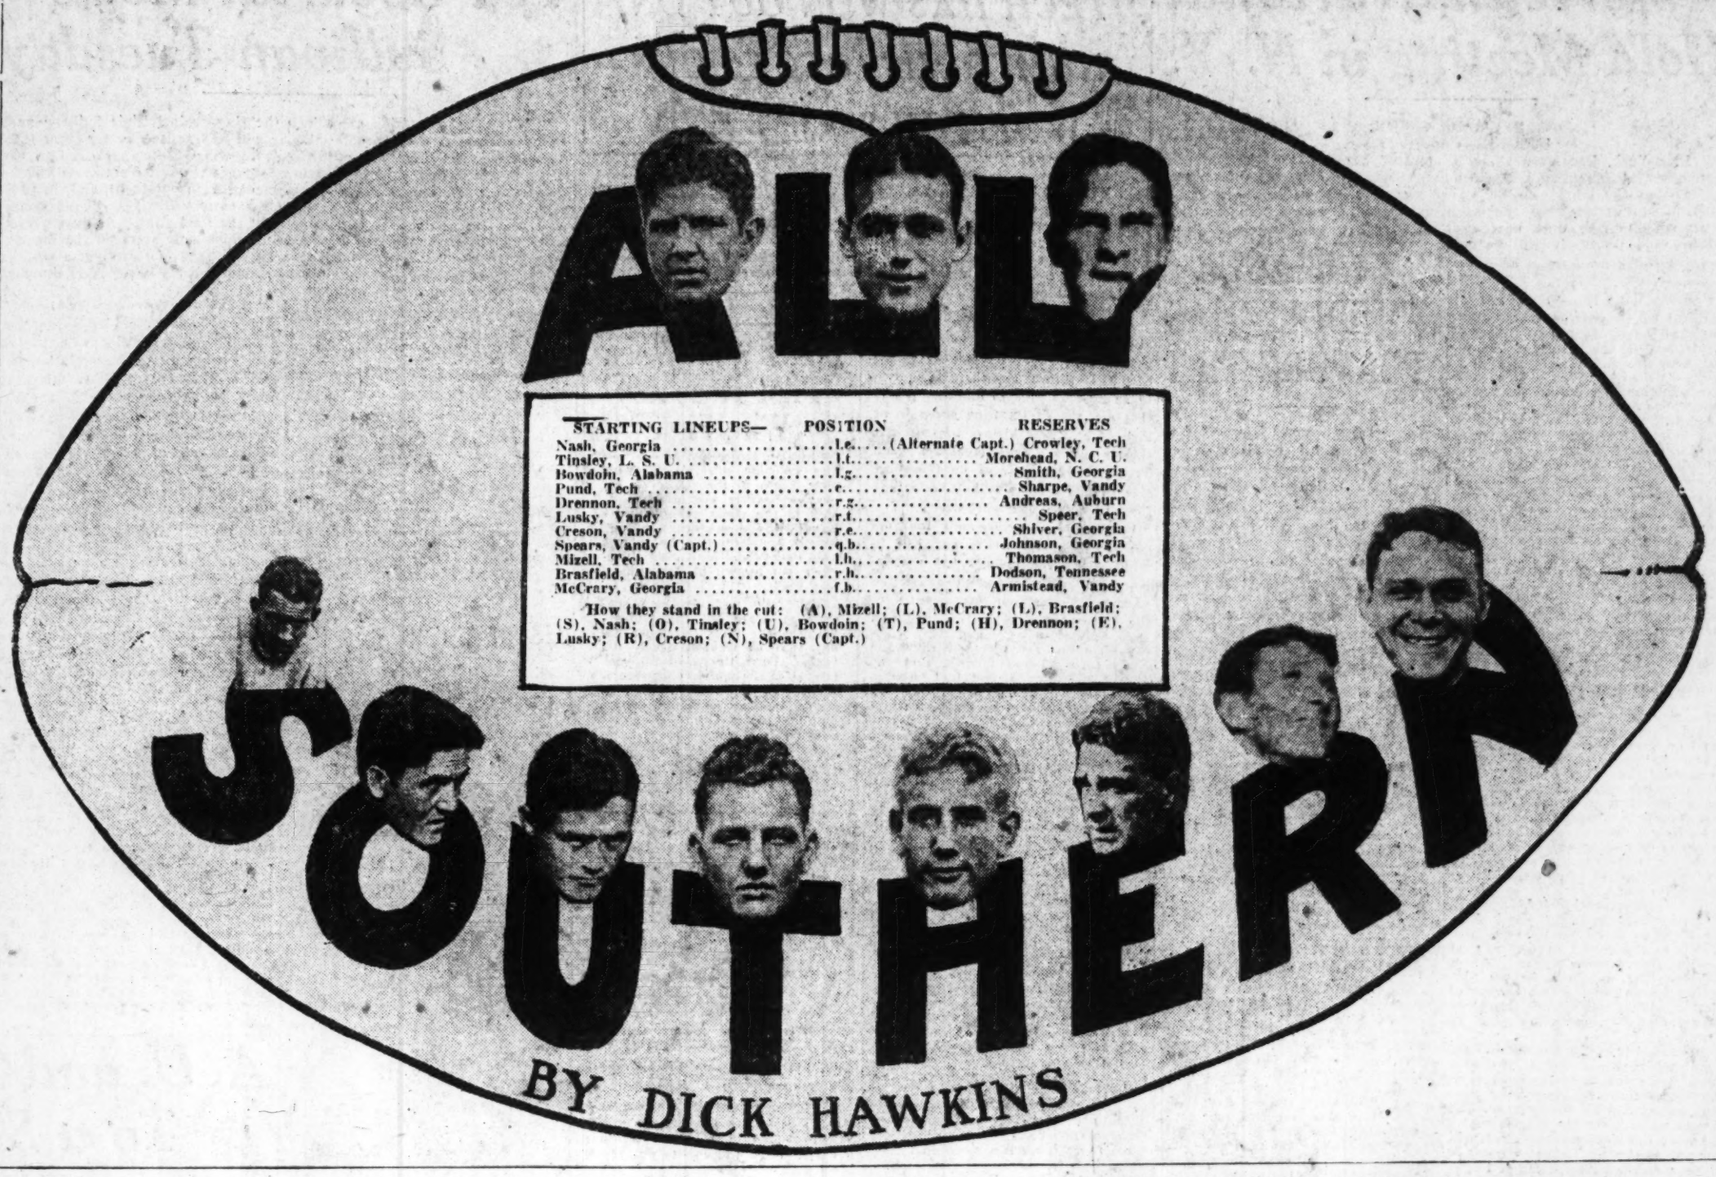

Well Rounded Backfield.

For that reason a backfield composed of four running backs with no punter of note and no passer or no interferer would be palpably unfair even though the ball toters were the best in the conference or in the world.

We have selected this team with the idea in mind that the time has come when an all-something team is to play on the amateur field against another selected team. The team we have selected should be able to do this if called upon.

With this problem in view another question arises. What about the men

Pat Barron Lands Position on All-Southern Prep Team

Billy Butler, Cadet Flash, Also Picked

Meyers, Teammate of Barron at Monroe, is Given an End Position.

Deland, Fla., December 10.—(AP)—Presenting a squad of 22 men instead of the usual first and second teams, the all-southern high grid board today made public its findings for the 1927 season, embracing what the board termed "the largest field of sensational grid stars the all-southern has offered during the past seven years."

The selection, announced by John "Red" Davis, chairman of the all-southern board, was compiled on the basis of information from more than 150 coaches and sport writers.

The squad:

Kirwan, end, Louisville Male, Louisville.
Baird, tackle, Tuscaloosa High, Tuscaloosa.
Marsh, guard, Andrew Jackson, Jacksonville.
Thomas, center, Jackson High, Jackson.
O'Connell, guard, Cathedral High, Nashville.
Bristow, tackle, St. Christopher, Richmond.
Goodman, end, Montgomery Ball, Nashville.
Mason (c.), quarter, Charlotte High, Charlotte.
Holley, half, Tuscaloosa High, Tuscaloosa.
Barron, half, Monroe A. & M., Monroe.
Butler, full, Riverside, Gainesville.
SAME RATING AS ABOVE TEAM.
Laney, end, Woodlawn High, Birmingham.
Abernathy, tackle, Tuscaloosa High, Tuscaloosa.
Bizot, guard, Louisville Male, Louisville.
Hardy, center, Hattiesburg High, Hattiesburg.
Thompson, guard, Woodberry Forest, Orange.
Phiel, tackle, St. Petersburg, St. Petersburg.
Meyers, end, Monroe A. & M., Monroe.
Worrall (c.), quarter, Montgomery Bell, Nashville.
Wieland, half, Dupont Manual, Louisville.
Clary, half, Gaffney, Gaffney.
Freeman, full, Riverside, Gainesville.

Honorable mention: Slaughter (Kentucky); Bennett (Florida); Dukes (South Carolina); McGuires (Virginia); Darling (Florida); Fulmer (Alabama), and Landis (North Carolina).

Two outstanding elevens, Tuscaloosa High and Montgomery Bell, both undefeated during the past three years, were honored with seven selections.

Honorable mention also was made of Charlotte High, Charlotte, N. C., and Riverside and Monroe A. & M. of Georgia, for their brilliant records and the number of individual stars each produced during the past season.

"Due to the extra large field of stars in the high school gallery this year the board decided to show no distinction between the players representing team No. 1 and 2," the board's announcement said. "The 1927 all-southern, like the all-American, is a squad of 22 players instead of eleven.

Mason Brilliant.

"Lowell Mason, brilliant quarterback on the Charlotte High team, and rated by many southern and one Washington, D. C., critic as the 'peer without equal,' deserves to share honors with Robert Worrall, Tennessee's greatest quarter. Both have been appointed captains on the mythical squads.

"Tuscaloosa High, with 26 straight victories, deserves four selections on the south's greatest squad, critics from Florida, Alabama, Chicago and Louisiana advise the board.

"Hillman Holley, Alabama's greatest prep player, in one game this season, carried the ball only seven times, racing each time for a touchdown. Holley also played in the 26 straight games Coach Burnum's Tuscaloosa team won.

"Tuscaloosa's 220-pound tackle, Baird, stands out as one of the south's greatest linesmen. Despite his weight, he is fast, aggressive and the unanimous selection as all-state tackle from Alabama.

Brainy Gridder.

"Alabama produced in Walton Laney, flashy end on the Woodlawn High, of Birmingham, a brainy player who knows football from A to Z. He was hard to knock from his feet and always held his flank against opositional thrusts, the board is informed.

"For the first time in several years Florida failed to produce all-southern back material, though in Marsh, of Andrew Jackson at Jacksonville, and Phiel, of St. Petersburg High, the sunshine state placed two linesmen on the squad. Marsh proved to be the bulk of strength on the Florida state champion eleven. Phiel was easily the outstanding linesman in south Florida.

"The chairman of the board, after witnessing a game in Atlanta on December 3 between Riverside and University High, immediately recognized Butler and Freemen as extraordinary all-southern candidates. Butler was Georgia's High school terror from the north to the extreme end of the state.

Pat Barron Picked.

"Pat Barron, brother of the famous "Red" of Georgia Tech, who is not playing on brother Red's reputation, ranks slightly behind Butler. Barron has been the scoring machine for A. and M. Two other Georgia stars in Freeman and Meyers will be further heard from in collegiate circles.

"James O'Connell, brilliant guard on the Cathedral High squad of Nashville, was rated Tennessee's outstanding linesman by a majority of the critics.

"Robert Worrall, Montgomery Bell academy quarterback, did everything but 'carry the water' in Nashville's great 34 to 13 victory over the famous Dupont Manual team, of Louisville. This game was the only one Dupont Manual lost during the season and it was on the Louisville grounds, which is still more credit to Nashville's three-year undefeated squad. During this time Montgomery Bell has scored 1,397 points to her opponents' 19 points.

"Virginia's two outstanding linesmen were Bristow, of St. Christopher, and Thompson, of Woodberry Forest High, both adjudged by the critics to have 'it' when football is discussed.

Kentucky to the Fore.

"Louisville Male and Manual, of Kentucky, represented for seven years on the all-southern, again places Hyland Bizot, guard; Raymond Wieland, halfback; Patrick Kirwan, end, and David Slaughter, center, among the select for 1927.

"Ben Clary, of Gaffney, S. C., High, had no opposition from his state to represent the all-southern.

"The all-southern board was forced to make one change in the case of Meyers, sensational Monroe, Ga., A. and M. star, which may cause football excitement in Georgia scholastic circles. Meyers was selected as an end on the mythical team by the foremost experts in the Empire state. He plays in the backfield, but was shifted to this position, Coach "Red" Barron stated, because of his ability to play anywhere.

"More than 150 authorities in eleven southern states assisted the board in making the 1927 squad possible."

The largest span bridge in the world, 3,500 feet long, will be built across the Hudson river between Fort Washington and Fort Lee.

All-Senior Conference Team for Coast Invasion Selected

American, National Hold Meeting in N. Y.

BY FRANK GETTY,
United News Sports Editor.

New York, December 10.—"Syndicate" baseball, the three-umpire system, establishment of a disabled list, the Matty memorial and discontinuation of the most valuable player awards are some of the subjects down for discussion when the magnates, managers and major league officials meet in New York next week.

Peace and prosperity will be the keynotes of the presidential addresses in both circuits.

President John Heydler will tell the National league meeting at the Waldorf that the attendance in 1927 was the largest in the history of organized baseball. President Ed Barnard, of the American league, will have something similar to say to his associates at the Belmont.

Baseball week will start with a meeting of the steering committee at the Roosevelt Monday morning, and the following day the two leagues will go behind a cigar smoke screen.

"Syndicate Ball" Death.

Both leagues will consider and probably adopt a proposal of the advisory committee for a ruling whereby no ball player, manager or magnate may own stock in more than one ball club—and that his own.

"Syndicate" ball, which once threatened the foundation of the national pastime, should receive a final death stroke with the adoption of such a rule, and there need be no repetition of the Hornsby incident which all but delayed the start of the 1927 season.

In signing a contract, hereafter, each ball player will certify that he owns no stock in another club.

The National league will hear a recommendation from President Heydler that the three-umpire system be continued. This was tried out experimentally, and worked well in 1927.

A final report from the Matty memorial committee will be submitted to the major leagues and a date fixed for dedication of the memorial at Bucknell college.

Directors Elected.

Charley Stoneham, Bill Veeck, Barney Dreyfuss and Emil Fuchs will be elected to the board of directors of the National league.

Incidentally, this will be the 51st annual meeting of the club owners of that circuit, while the American league, naturally, dates back but 27 years.

A suggestion has been made that the customary annual award of $1,000 to the player voted to be the most valuable to his club does more harm than good and should be discontinued. The owners will vote on the suggestion.

Among the new business which will come up next week is the proposal to create a disabled list for major league ball clubs.

Disability List.

This list would include those players who are forced out of the game for long periods. It would enable the clubs to fill up their active lists with actual players. The cases of Ross Young and George Kelly are cited in support of the plan. The Giants and the Reds had to keep these players on their active lists, although they could not play.

A doctor's certificate would be required for a player to get on a club's disabled list, and once on, he would have to stay there 60 playing days.

A player injured the first of September and placed on the disabled list would have to remain there for the first month of the ensuing season.

Marquette's '28 Grid Card Made

Milwaukee, Wis., December 10.—Following Thursday night's opening battle with the Milwaukee Normal quintet, the Marquette university basketball team swings into the heavy end of its 1927-28 season next Tuesday night, December 13, when Coach Frank J. Murray will escort his men to Evanston, Ill., for a game with Northwestern university.

The Northwestern scrap is the first of a series of major engagements which the Murraymen will face within the next month. Following the Evanston game, they are due to play Loyola in Milwaukee, December 21; Minnesota in Minneapolis, December 29; Iowa in Milwaukee, January 1, and the Oregon Aggies in Milwaukee, January 4.

It is difficult to guess whom Coach Murray will start against Northwestern. There are five veterans on his squad, including Captain Floyd Razner and Swede Gebert, the all-American halfback, as forwards; Jack Schumacher, as center or guard, and Johnny Padden and Denver Shimek, guards. These men, however, will have to fight for their positions as the sophomore material is the most promising in years and it is likely there will be two or three new faces in the varsity array this winter.

Promising amon gthe newcomers are Larry Bugge and Ray Andrew, centers; Jimmy O'Donnell, Gil Corbett, Neil Gonyo and Benny Mosher, guards, and Jack Zummach, Joe Brock, Roman Rydeski, Paul Martineau and Marty McLaughlin, forwards. In all advance scrimmages, Coach Murray has varied his line-up and it is impossible to give out the names of the group that will line up against Northwestern.

Miami in Tie With Georgetown

Miami, Fla., December 10.—(AP)—The University of Miami held Georgetown university to a 7-7 tie in weather too hot for football here this afternoon. Until the last few minutes of play, it was Georgetown's game throughout.

Outweighed and showing weak opposition to Georgetown ends runs, though holding fairly well in the line, the University of Miami finally got its passes working for the tieing score. On straight football Georgetown showed better but Miami got the breaks. Both teams tried a set of complicated fakes with little benefit.

Anderson, quarterback for the Kentucky team, was the outstanding performer of the game, showing consistent gains around either end and doing fairly well through the line. Courtney beat him badly on the kicks.

Anderson scored for Georgetown on a ten-yard end run in the second quarter. Caines kicked goal. Miami's touchdown came in the last minutes, on a 30-yard pass, Courtney to O'Brien. Courtney booted the tieing point.

CITY LEAGUE SCHEDULE HAS FEATURE TILT

Another large crowd is expected to witness the second round of basketball in the City league Thursday on the Atlanta Athletic club court. The A. A. C. "Reds," Gulf Refining company and Southern Bell were winners in the opening game, and now the Gulf Refining and Southern Bell will meet in the feature tilt Thursday.

Many former stars have been registered and the games are already hard fought, but just as soon as all the players get in good condition the battles should be fast and close. Atlanta Joint Terminal and the A. C. C. Reds will meet in the first number at 7:30. The Gulf Refining & Southern Bell, two strong rivals, will meet in the second struggle, and the Knights of Columbus lock horns with the hard-fighting Avondale club. This last game should be very close and exciting as they appear on equal strength.

The games will be played in the following order:

Atlanta Joint Terminal vs. A. A. C. Reds at 7:30.

Gulf Refining company vs. Southern Bell at 8:20.

Avondale vs. Knights of Columbus at 9:10.

GULF TEAM WINS FIRST ROAD GAME.

Gulf Refining company's quintet won their first road game, Friday, when they handed the New Holland Athletic club one of their worse defeats, 57 to 23. The winners soon started their scoring and their offense could never be checked. Captain Oscar Brock starred in ringing up 17 points. The losers did not handle the ball well in the first half and could not stand the fast pace set by the winners. The Gulf's next road game will be with the University of Georgia, December 17, in Athens.

TECH FINISHES 3RD IN B. A. C. 3-MILE RUN

Birmingham, Ala., December 10.—(AP)—Luny Smith, of the University of Alabama, outsprinted a strong field of 57 to break the tape first in the Birmingham Athletic club's seventeenth annual road race here this afternoon, and set a new record for the 3-mile course. Smith's time was 15 minutes 51 3-5 seconds.

Bill Tate, former Georgia trackman and holder of the old record of 16 minutes and 11 seconds, finished second, running under the B. A. C. colors. Brewer, of Georgia Tech, ran third.

Georgia Tech took first place team honors, with Georgia and Mississippi A. & M. trailing second and third, respectively. Mississippi college concentrated its points to win the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Association trophy.

Grimes Is Sent To San Antonio

Little Rock, Ark., December 10.—Another of its veteran players was disposed of today when the Little Rock club made a deal that transferred First Baseman Ray Grimes to the San Antonio, Texas, club. The deal was announced tonight upon the return of President R. G. Allen, of the Travelers, from the meeting at Dallas. Grimes, for many years a leading hitter in the American association, came to the Travelers last spring and for a while during the summer led the Southern in hitting. He fell off toward the close of the season but finished third with a .358 average. President Allen disposed of three players at Dallas. Outfielder Tom Gulley, Catcher Eddie Ainsmith and Grimes.

Life-Jackets for Racers.

Southampton, Eng.—Life-saving jackets are to be worn by helmsman and passengers in English motorboat races hereafter. The Marine Motoring association has specified that the jackets shall be worn in outboard motorboats and speed boats capable of attaining more than 12 knots, when racing or attempting records.

TECH HAS WON OUT ON NUMEROUS OCCASIONS WHEN ON SHORT END

BY WHITNER CARY.

With mud cleats now dry from the battle of the mighty mire of last Saturday, with the fever of the partisans of both Tech and Georgia greatly reduced, with bets practically all settled and with the last of many severe headaches caused by either over-rejoicing or sorrow-drowning now but unpleasant memories, it might be of some interest to gaze backward into the past football history of Tech and see just how few times the Tornado has ever been beaten on Grant field when the odds favored the invaders.

As all know the weeks preceding the historic battle of the mighty mire, the Georgia supporters were giving odds that ranged anywhere from two to as high as four to one and points that ran the gamut from seven to as high as 14. Now history tells us that this is not the only occassion when Tech entered the arena on the short side of the betting and came out at the long end of the score sheet.

Since 1917 there are only four occasions that this writer can call to mind where the invader has entered Grant field a favorite and gone out the winner. These four occasions were the Notre Dame games of 1922 and 1925, the Alabama game of 1926, when the Crimson Tide washed over the Flats to a 21-to-0 victory, and the 14-to-13 victory scored by Georgia over the Tornado in 1926. In all those engagements the invading team entered the stadium the favorite. But on many other occasions there are eloquent reminders to show where the Tornado upset the dope in most glaring fashion.

When Penn Was Beaten.

All well remember the year 1917 when a confident University of Pennsylvania team invaded the south and how the backers of the easterners out at Fort McPherson went broke laying as high as three to one against Tech. Fort McPherson was chock full of ex-Penn students at that time. These lads thought that it was an excellent time to add to their army pay by taking some easy money away from rampant Tech supporters. A most sensational 42-0 Tech victory, scored by that great combination found Strupper and Guyon at the height of brilliant careers resulted. This was probably as bad a case of the under dog in the betting coming out on top as southern football history can produce.

Another occasion when the coffers of the speculatively inclined gentlemen of Atlanta were greatly enriched by optimistic supporters of an invading foe came in 1920 when a glorified Center team, bearing the memory of a great stand in the Harvard stadium and surrounded by a color and romance seldom carried by any football team, came to Atlanta with hope and left with a 24-to-0 defeat.

The Kentuckians came with wads of tobacco money, Carolinians came with pockets bulging with cotton money. The outsiders bet on Center and bet heavy. The Tech supporters took juicy odds. The outsiders went to bed that night (provided they had money enough for a couch) sick at heart and broken in spirit and pocketbook. The Tech supporters went out and celebrated and bought an extra supply of coal for a hard winter.

All the old-time fans will recall when Rutgers came to Atlanta in 1921 and went off at the short end of a 48 to 14 count. That was supposed to have been a fairly large upset.

In 1924 a powerful Penn State eleven invaded the Tech flats with an impressive record back of it and high hopes for a championship season. Tech threw a wrench into the dope and the easterners' hopes by taking a desperately fought encounter 15 to 13.

There have been other occasions, however, when the situation was exactly reversed. When Tech was heralded as the favorite and when the shades of evening saw the Gold and White colors lowered to half mast.

Alabama in 1924 and in 1925 was at the short end of the wagering and on each occasion won the game. In 1924 it was Johnny Mack Brown that contributed such splendid work to a well-earned 14-to-0 victory and the following year the Tide, still washing toward a conference championship, won a hard-fought game by the score of 7-0.

In 1919 Tech was on the wrong side of two tremendous upsets and on the right side of another. Washington and Lee came to Grant field with a pretty good team, but one which was hardly thought good enough to beat Tech. In fact, points were freely given by the Tech supporters. The Jackets lost that one by the close margin of 3 to 0.

Georgetown Follows.

Georgetown followed and all the wise birds thought that the Washington outfit was a lead pipe cinch. Points were freely given on the Irishmen and Tech was installed at the short end. When the final whistle blew Tech emerged at the long end of a 27-to-0 score.

That affair gave the Jacket supporters plenty of spending money and plenty of confidence for Auburn, which came to Grant field on Thanksgiving day. The stage was all set for a gigantic upset and when the turkey day classic was history Tech was beaten by the count of 14 to 7 when everything had pointed to a great Jacket victory.

So while the Tech victory over Georgia may be an example where the money and dope received a bad jolt, there are plenty of other occasions to keep it company.

Giants To Erect Youngs Memorial

New York, December 7.—(United News.)—A bronze memorial tablet to Ross Youngs, former right fielder of the New York Giants who died this year at his home at San Antonio, Texas, will be imbedded in the right field wall at the Polo Grounds.

The introductory lines of the inscription will read: "Ross Youngs, 1897-1927. Here he gave his best for the Giants, and here he rose to a place among the baseball immortals."

The only other memorial ever erected to a baseball player in a major league stadium is the monument in center field at the Polo Grounds to Eddie Grant, the Giant who fell in Belleau Wood. In time a pretentious tribute to Christy Matthewson will be erected at the Polo Grounds.

The last line on Young's memorial will read: "Erected by the baseball devotees of New York."

Boxer Wins When Pilot Reaches Wire First

Chicago, December 10.—(AP)—The old-time practice of winning fights in the telegraph office by beating the other manager to the wires gave Wolcott Langford, Chicago negro middleweight, a victory that he did not earn over Red Uhlan, San Francisco southpaw, in Davenport, last night.

Telegrams were sent out proclaiming Langford the winner, whereas the facts developed today that he was decisively defeated. Dave Barry, of Chicago, referee of the match, said that if a decision had been allowed he would have given it to Uhlan, who has beaten Langford on two previous occasions.

Uhlan said that he would jump off the Mississippi river bridge if he lost. He didn't have to jump.

Three Tech Men On All-Southern

who must take the field if one of your players is hurt in a game? That brings up the question of the reserves or second team. Let it be understood that our selection this year is of 22 men, not 11 men as is the custom. We are selecting a squad and the first team is simply that one we would start if we were coaching the all-conference squad in a game. In almost every case the members of our reserve team are better players in one branch of the game than are the "first-string" men.

To be more exact in terminology our selection is an all-conference squad rather than an all-conference team. In case of a game these two teams could be mixed up or interchanged without hurting the efficiency of the team in action appreciably. Therein lies the secret of most great teams.

The Line.

First let us discuss the line, the bulwark behind which every backfield must fight and without which no backfield can carry the ball. At left end we would start Tom Nash, of Georgia. This announcement will bring loud lamentations from many fans who saw Tom in action only against Tech. In that game the big flanker was by no means at his best. In fact he looked bad but show me the man who stays at the top of his form for 10 straight games and I will show you a super-man. Nash is the greatest pass-receiving end in the conference today and he is a bear on offense. At defense he is not as good as Ed Crowley of Tech who is selected as his reserve.

Tinsley, of L. S. U., would start at left tackle. This giant gained his place on our selection in the game with Tech at Grant field. The team he played on was losing from the first minute to the last but still the giant frame of this big tackler stood out like a tower in an otherwise mediocre line. He is particularly good at going down under punts but never broke from the line too soon. His first assistant should be Morehead of North Carolina who plays much the same type of game and is nearly as large.

Bowdoin at Guard.

Next to the pivot man on the left side of the line we place one of the greatest guards the south has seen for many a year, "Goofy" Bowdoin, of Alabama. Bowdoin made his mark in the game against Georgia at Birmingham and it was just the final mark of a long string this season. If they succeeded in getting the heavy Bowdoin out of the play little Gene Smith, of Georgia, would take his place. There would be a great difference in weight but Gene's work this season has made all the folks forget his lack of poundage.

When the first two games of the season had gone by we little thought that Peter Pund would be our choice for the all-important pivot position. From the start he has been a great defensive center but he has made too many bad snaps. That cloud hung over his head until the Georgia game when he played a full hour in the mud and never once missed his receiver with the snap. He also continued to carry on his program of stopping every play coming through the line. If Peter should get to heaving wildly we have Sharpe of Vanderbilt to take his place. Sharpe is not a great defensive center but he has not made a really bad pass in three years of college football.

At right guard is a little giant who, like most guards, is seldom in the limelight, but without whom the great line of the 1927 Tornado would have been without one most important cog. We refer to Raleigh Drennon, the blonde boy who can be seen sticking out of any line play that happens to hit the right side of Tech's line. Drennon is undoubtedly the sweetest defensive guard in the conference today and though he has a peer in Bowdoin on the offense, he could not be left off the squad. His relief is Andress, of Auburn, another great guard.

Lusky and Speers.

The other tackle goes to Lusky of Vanderbilt who has been an outstanding tackle all this year. In this position, however, Frank Speer, of Tech, is almost equally as good as it would be mighty hard to select the starter at this position. We pick Lusky to start because of his greater experience. At right end the starter would be "Kitty" Creson, of Vanderbilt, as great a defensive end as the conference has seen in many a year. He played the entire Tech-Vandy game without once being taken off his feet and he is a pass receiver of no mean ability. His relief man would be "Chick" Shiver, of Georgia.

Now to the backfield. There are five important divisions of backfield work and our backfield is selected to have one star in each of these branches of the game.

First: At quarterback we have Billy Spears, who would call signals and do a big share of the ball carrying. No argument is needed to convince the public that he is qualified to do both of these things. He can also do the drop kicking for point after touchdown or goal. The former is doubly important in these days when points after touchdown are so hard to get. He can also punt if necessary. As a passer, he is unexcelled.

Mizell a Great Punter.

In Warner Mizell, of Tech, we have the greatest punter in the conference today and a beautiful passer. He is also a threat with the ball under his arm. Mizell is only a sophomore, but no halfback in the conference today can boast of any greater accomplishment even though he be senior or junior.

At the other half we have a great interferer and good ball toter as well as a defensive ace in the person of Brasfield, of Alabama. He is a great broken-field runner and a fair passer, but his great strength lies in his secondary defensive work and his blocking ability. He can also punt if necessary.

McCrary would start at fullback and there again we have a great defensive back and an expert interference agent. This big Irishman would also be very useful in his line plunging and as a catcher of passes.

That backfield would be hard to beat, but the reserves would be but little weaker in any department.

Johnson, of Georgia, would replace Spears and the style of play in the backfield would change materially. Johnson is not a great ball carrier. But he is a wonderful field general and a strong interferer. With this reserve backfield in the field The Terrible Thompson of Tech and Dodson of Tennessee would be the two halves. Dodson plays at fullback, but with a quarter in the quartet who never carries the ball, we prefer to have the Tennessee flash at one of the halves. He and Mizell would be a mighty hard pair to stop. Both are fast, but they drive, too. Stumpy could boot the points after touchdown from placement. Thomason is one of the best defensive backs in the south and as a safety man he is high explosive.

Armistead, of Vanderbilt, gets the position of fullback on our reserve squad, and with these two driving halves ahead of him he would fit better than the great McCrary. Armistead is a great pass receiver and carries the ball well. He can also pass and punt in case of need.

There you have it. This selection may not agree with yours, but if it doesn't, just pick your team and challenge me to a game—then try and get it.

Ted Goodrich Meets Sullivan Tuesday

When Ted Goodrich steps into the ring against Dixie Sullivan next Tuesday night at the Ringside club he will be opposed by a fighter fully capable of extending him to the limit to win. Sullivan proved to the fans present in his fight here two weeks ago against Tommy O'Rourke that he can dish out plenty of punishment for an opponent, and, in addition, take blows and still come back for more. He is a rugged young man with a punch that is dangerous until the final gong. Sullivan scored quite an impression on the crowd here in his only start by the masterful way in which he trimmed O'Rourke. Judged in this fight alone, he should give Goodrich plenty to worry about with his heavy body punches before the final gong has sounded.

Fights Here

When Ted Goodrich steps in the ring Tuesday night at the Ringside club he will have his hands full for ten rounds. And the above pictured leather pusher is the one expected to carry Ted to the limit. He is Dixie Sullivan, Birmingham scrapper, who will oppose Goodrich in the main bout.

"It has been the custom in Atlanta," said Matchmaker Jimmie Mayson, "for a headliner of this caliber to be backed with a weak set of preliminaries, but that isn't to hold true on this next card." A semi-windup almost equal with the main bout has been added. Jimmie Murphy will oppose Young Carter, local lightweight, in this encounter. Murphy has met and defeated some of the best of his division in the south, and holds two draw bouts with Baby Stribling. He has never fought before an Atlanta audience, but has built quite a reputation for himself in Florida rings, where he is well known as a hard working pugilist who always strives to give his opponents plenty of trouble and the fans plenty of fistic entertainment. Young Carter is no novice at the game himself. A string of eight consecutive knockouts is the record back of him, and he doesn't intend having this broken by Murphy or anyone else.

The card will be opened with a six-round affair between Spike Kelly and Add Thaxton, popular among basketball circles in Atlanta. In the other six-round bout Johnny Vickers will be given an opportunity to redeem himself of the miserable showing he made several weeks ago against Casey Jones, when he tackles Carter Morgan, also of Atlanta.

Four hundred ringside tickets have been placed on sale at Hack Eibel's billiard parlor at Peachtree and Walton streets, and anyone wishing to avoid the rush at the box office Tuesday night may secure tickets there. General admission tickets will be held in reserve until the night of the fight when they will be placed on sale at the club.

Missionary Sprinter.

London.—Eric Liddell, England's famous sprinter who is doing missionary work in China, recently set a far-eastern track record of 10 4-5 for 100 meters and beat all comers in North China in the 200 and 400-meter events. He may go to Amsterdam for the Olympics.

A. U. and Clark Fight To a Scoreless Tie

The colored football championship of the state of Georgia and the city of Atlanta will have to be divided between Clark university and its near neighbor, Atlanta university.

For on Saturday afternoon at Spiller field before a large crowd of football followers, these two teams battled to a scoreless tie.

From the opening whistle until the final blast put an end to hostilities the game was hard fought. Atlanta university had an opportunity to score in the first quarter when a drive, delivered with straight football as the leading ground gaining weapon, took the ball deep in Clark's territory. Clark had two big chances to count. The first came in the second quarter when the ball was taken to Atlanta's 12-yard line on a drive. The second came in the closing minutes of the fourth period when a recovered muffed punt gave Clark possession of the ball on its opponent's 7-yard line. In each instance the defense stiffened and no gains could be made.

Mid-Field Battle.

With these three exceptions the game was fought in the middle of the field with both teams unable to pierce the opposing defense. Both sides went to the air on frequent occasions, but as a rule the gains made by the aerial route were small.

After battling furiously until but minutes were left in the fourth quarter, Clark had its biggest chance to score. A muffed Clark punt was recovered on Atlanta's seven-yard line. Two mighty attempts through the line, a line that held like granite all afternoon and the Clark quarter called for an end run. This resulted in no gain and a place kick was tried. The effort went wide and the ball went over to Atlanta on its own 20-yard line.

With a scoreless tie almost certain, the Atlanta team began to shoot passes with desperate and reckless abandon while still deep in their own territory. These failed and a punt resulted. The game was ended a few moments later.

A. U. Line Stars.

As mentioned before the work of the Atlanta line was a big factor in the scoreless tie. This forward wall withstood repeated thrusts and it was seldom that the Clark backs, fast and versatile though they were, could gain much yardage through that human wall.

The Clark line also held well in the pinches. It was mostly a defensive battle from start to finish.

The defensive work of Pierce was outstanding for Atlanta, while the same can be said of the exhibition of Willingham and Ballou for Clark.

McPherson and Whedbee were the offensive stars for Atlanta, while the ground gaining of Chambers and W. Williams for Clark was a feature. Williams contributed one run of 35 yards in the second half that was the prettiest piece of ground gaining seen during the afternoon.

HOOPER HOLDS BOXING SHOW ON MONDAY

Forced to call off his show last week because of the unruly elements, Billy Hooper, former middleweight battler has planned the show for Monday night, beginning at 8:30 at the auditorium annex.

Sylvester Davis, claimant of the welterweight championship of the southeast in the colored division, is in for a rough night. That is, if Battling Kennon, the Atlanta negro, whom he battles, is at his best. Davis, who is working out in Macon, will finish his training Sunday, as will Kennon, and both boys, who have shown before, are eager to get at each other.

Hooper's show Monday will be headed by this bout. Both fighters have been working hard for some two weeks conditioning for the fight. They were matched to meet each other last week as the main attraction on Hooper's show which was called off.

Davis has a good record. He has won quite a number of battles since he captured his title belt. He has fought good boys, defeating the majority of them.

Preliminaries to the show will be good ones, making up a night's entertainment that Hooper hopes to satisfy the Atlanta fans.

Waycross Team Elects Captain

Waycross, Ga., December 10.—John Tomberlin, for two years a guard on the Waycross High school football team, was elected captain of the 1928 eleven at the annual banquet which marked the close of the 1927 season. Tom Bevis was named alternate captain, and Jim George second alternate. Ed Daniels was elected manager.

At the banquet were a number of guests, including Head Coach S. H. Sherman, Assistant Coach Matthews, Superintendent A. G. Miller and Principal W. D. Miller. Dr. W. F. Reavis acted as toastmaster.

Retiring team leaders are Ralph Sweat, captain; H. C. Fason, alternate captain; Ralph Herrin, manager.

Berwick Winner Of X-Country Run

Baton Rouge, La., December 10.—(AP)—Breasting the tape ahead of a Louisiana State university teammate, Jimmie Berwick, of Franklin, La., Tiger distance runner, today won the Southern Amateur Athletic union's cross-country crown abdicated by Gilbert Wade, of New Orleans.

Berwick completed the 5-mile grind in 27 minutes 19 seconds. O. L. Wright, Tiger sophomore, was second, and J. H. Dupont, also of L. S. U., third. T. A. Dekle, of Tulane, was fourth.

Harpster Elected.

Pittsburgh, December 10.—(AP)—Howard Harpster, of Akron, Ohio, was elected captain of the Carnegie Tech 1928 football squad today. Harpster is the regular quarterback.

Native Persian Stars In U. S. College Sports

Rock Island, Ill., December 10.—(AP) Martin Knanishu, a native of Persia, whose athletic training in youth was gained in playing battle-dore and shuttle-cock in his home land, has become one of the outstanding athletes at Augustana college here.

Knanishu, whose American friends have nicknamed him "Rabbit," is a football and basketball star, and plays golf and tennis with facility. The Augustana eleven's attack was built around him this year.

Knanishu is preparing for consular work and expects to enter Georgetown university.

South Places Two Players on A. P. All-American Team

Shiver And Bill Spears Are Picked

Many Southern Players Land on Second and Third Teams and Honorable Mention.

BY ALAN J. GOULD.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

New York, December 10.—(AP)—The fleeting star of All-American football fame, after following a westward course for the last few years, shifts toward the south this season to brighten up a new gridiron constellation.

East and west, where the pace usually is swifter, share the major All-American honors for 1927, from a numeral standpoint, but the contributions of the south to the all-star array, greater than ever before, form the most striking feature of the annual consensus, compiled by The Associated Press from the opinions of more than 200 qualified observers—coaches, officials, sports editors and staff experts who covered every sector of the battlefront.

On the first team, an eleven so All-American in character that no college has more than one representative, the east captures four places, the middle west three, the south and far west each two.

33 Players.

The All-American squad, 33 players altogether, including the shock troops of the second and third teams, reveal the east and middle west tied, with ten places each while the south, including the southwestern area, grabs eight and the far west five. Twenty-three universities and colleges are represented in this galaxy.

To get an idea of how the south has progressed it is only necessary to note that it contributed only three to the All-American squad last year, including one first team nomination, and four in 1925. Thus this season the south inserts more stars into the picture than it has in two previous years combined.

The University of Georgia is the chief contributors; in fact, the Bulldogs lead all other colleges by gaining four places on the mythical lineups. Minnesota has three while Michigan, Army, Pennsylvania, Southern California and Dartmouth have two each.

Shiver Heads List.

The Georgia phalanx is led by Captain "Chick" Shiver, a first team choice at end, along with the south's other representatives, Captain Bill Spears, of Vanderbilt, at quarterback. Herdis McCrary, crack Georgia fullback, gains a post on the second eleven, while Tom Nash, Shiver's running mate on the Georgia flanks, and Gene Smith, guard, are on the third team.

The two survivors of the 1926 Associated Press all-star team, Captain-elect Mortimer Sprague, of the Army, at tackle and Captain Herb Joesting, of Minnesota, at fullback, retain their places while Bennie Oosterbaan, Michigan captain and end, returns to the wing job he held down on the 1925 mythical array.

Spears Lands.

Morley Drury, Southern California captain and ball-carrying ace, was as close to being a unanimous selection as any star but he is shifted to halfback, his natural position, from quarterback, in order to make room on the first team for Bill Spears, Vanderbilt's triple threat and one of the greatest backs the south has ever produced. Gibby Welch, hard-running Pittsburgh ace, gains the other halfback position.

But for being declared ineligible for the Princeton and Harvard games, Bruce Caldwell, of Yale, probably would have been a certain first team selection. As it was, many observers accorded him a first team place, on the basis of what he did against Brown, Army and Dartmouth, but the majority considered his failure to play out the season, plus his technical status of ineligibility, sufficient to prevent his being picked in the top flight.

Close Picking.

Oosterbaan and Shiver, a big majority agreed, were without peers in the end positions but there were many close contests for the other line positions, particularly among the tackles. The giant Sprague, Army's captain, and stocky Ed Hake, Pennsylvania leader, gained the tackle positions by none too comfortable margins over such other stars as Jesse Hibbs, of Southern California, John Smith, of Pennsylvania, rated close to a par with his teammate, Raskowski, of Ohio State, Nowack, of Illinois, and Perry, of the Army.

Bill Webster, Yale leader, stood out conspicuously among the guards and was a general choice but John Smith, Notre Dame, the other selection, had strong rivals in Hanson, of Minnesota; Baer, of Michigan; Barnhill, of Tennessee, and Gene Smith, of Georgia. The Smith family was unusually conspicuous in the list of candidates.

It was a merry battle, too, for the center berth but Larry Bettencourt, versatile pivot of St. Mary's eleven, of San Francisco, got the call over Claude Grigsby, of Georgetown, Dud Charlesworth, of Yale, Ken Rouse, of Chicago, and Bob Reitsch, of Illinois. Bettencourt, among his more enthusiastic admirers, has been compared to such famous centers as Peck, of Pittsburgh, and Schulz, of Michigan.

Harriers in South.

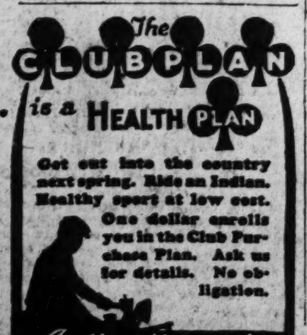

Clinton, Miss., December 10.—(AP)—Cross country running will be added to the list of Southern Intercollegiate Athletic association events when its meet is held here December 17 at Mississippi college.

The run will be for five miles and athletes from Centre, University of Chattanooga, Birmingham-Southern, Presbyterian college and other member institutions will participate.

5 LETTER MEN AVAILABLEFOR V. P. I. QUINT

Blacksburg, Va., December 10.—Bud Moore, the Tech trainer, has taken over the reins of varsity basketball at Virginia Tech and is putting his squad of 25 candidates through several weeks of early practice before the start of the term examinations, December 19.

Five letter men are available for the team this year. These are Adger Johnson, who can play either center or forward; Sam Rice and John Looney, both forwards, Captain Mike Peerman and Macauley McEver, the two regulars during much of last season. Recent illness has forced John Looney to discontinue his studies until the holidays and fans and authorities here are afraid that his late sickness will prevent him from going out for the team this year. Looney's loss may prove a serious handicap to the team unless Bud Moore can uncover some new sensation of the Buddy Dear type, and this is a dream unlikely to be realized. Players with the ability of Dear blossom no more than once in a decade. Just now it is not known whether or not this illness, which kept Looney out of the football lineup after the first of November, will also keep him off the court during the coming campaign.

The new court mentor of the Gobblers has six reserve members of last year's quintet contending for the center and forward positions and these men are expected to push the veteran letter men when serious work gets under way. Four of these, numbering Lefty Lawson, Chip Dashiell, Al Watkins and John Jacobs are forwards with experience in previous campaigns while Hugh Wade and Fannie Brown, the two centers, both saw service last year in quite a few battles. This sextet is made up of capable ball players, and embodies strong reserve material of first team caliber which should count heavily in the coming campaign.

Seven outstanding members of the '27 freshman team are also on hand. No predictions can be made at this stage of the workouts, but this group boasts several men who should give the vets plenty of hot competition during the next few weeks. Evans and Haines, in this group, are competing for forward berths, while Porterfield, Moore, Shepherd, Amole and Meyer are out for the guard positions. Other likely looking candidates are Lincoln, Spangler and Sullivan, guards; Lanford, Wooldridge, Bibb, Blair and Neighouse, forwards.

The 1928 season opens January 11, with King College at Blacksburg. Several games are yet tentative, but C. P. Miles, graduate manager, states that University of Richmond, University of the South, Georgetown, Alabama and Maryland will furnish new spice to the schedule. Other games are booked with S. I. A. A. teams and the customary two games with Washington and Lee, V. M. I. and Virginia.

Hudkins Meets Zevic January 6

Los Angeles, December 10.—(AP)—Ace Hudkins has been matched with Jack Zivic, of Pittsburgh, for a 10-round bout at Detroit January 6, Clyde Hudkins, brother and manager of the Nebraska welterweight title contender, announced today.

The announcement followed word from Topeka, Kan., that Hudkins had been reinstated by the athletic commission of that state which is a member of the National Boxing association. This was understood to automatically restore him to good standing in all states operating under association rules.

Hudkins was suspended several months ago following an alleged "fixed" bout with Sid Socklyn, one of the ace's sparring partners, at Kansas City, Kans.

Hudkins now is en route to his home at Lincoln, Neb., where his mother is ill.

SOCCER GAME SLATED TODAY AT FORT MAC

The Atlanta Soccer club and the soldiers of the 22nd Infantry meet today in a soccer match which has been postponed for sometime. Since their last meeting when the soldiers were new and inexperienced at the game much water has flowed under the bridge and the doughboys are confident of giving the Atlantans a real battle for the honor of being declared winners.

The Twenty-second's team has had no new players of note but the defensive strength of the team has been increased 100 per cent. Heretofore the soldiers spent about half their efforts in keeping the ball out of the goal, but with the placing of the proper fullbacks and defensive halfback in such a way as to keep the invaders from the goal line they are enabled to get in quite a few shots at the goal themselves. Krall and Holloway are experienced players and are placed at fullback. Captain Bolling, an old head at the game, is at center half. Tedesco, the offensive star of the club, covers the center position. The game starts at 2:30 p. m.

PECKINPAUGH NAMED PILOT OF CLEVELAND

Cleveland, Ohio, December 10.—(AP) Roger Peckinpaugh, for many years one of the leading infielders of the American league, tonight was named to manage the Cleveland Indians during the 1928 campaign. Announcement was made by Alva Bradley, president of the club, and Billy Evans, general manager.

Peckinpaugh will make his first appearance as leader of the Indians at the annual winter meeting of major leagues in New York next week.

Peckinpaugh played with the Chicago White Sox during the past year. Evans announced he had secured his release.

Cleveland Product.

Peckinpaugh is the product of Cleveland sand lots, winning his first chance in professional baseball by his sensational playing with amateur teams here. He played with the Indians in 1910 when he was 19 years old. He then was farmed out to the New Haven club in the Connecticut league and spent the following season with the Portland club of the Pacific Coast league. He was recalled to the Indians and played with them until 1913 when he was traded to the New York Yankees. He remained with them until 1922 when he was traded to Boston and then to Washington.

Peckinpaugh helped Washington win American league pennants 1924 and 1925, and a world's championship against New York in 1924. The Senators traded him to the Chicago White Sox last winter, but a bad leg kept him off the field most of the past season and he acted as advisor to Coach Schalk.

HUTCHISON IN MIAMI GOLF MEETS

Miami, Fla., December 10.—Jock Hutchison, a member of the original "Big Three" of golf in this country, and the first American to win the British open championship, will be a competitor in the two $3,000 open tournaments to be held in this vicinity the first week in January. His entry was received today for the Miami Beach open and the Miami open championships. The respective dates for these classics are January 2-3 and January 7-8.

Hutchison is the third famous professional to enter these blue-ribbon events. The first two to telegraph their entries are Gene Sarazen, former United States open champion, and Johnny Farrell, the hero of the 1927 season, during which he established a world's record by winning nine major tournaments, and finishing well up in the national open.

Out of "Big Money."

Jock Hutchison has not been in the "big money" the past two seasons, and this is his "comeback" attempt. In the game of golf, a player is generally supposed to improve with practice, so it may be that the Hutch is on his way back to the crest. He has the game and the shots, and in the coming tournaments here he will be put to a real test by the topnotch professionals and amateurs.

The Chicago veteran has an enviable record in the links sport. He won the British open crown in 1921, being the first American representative to turn this trick in nearly half a century. Since then, the British open has become almost an American family affair, but it was the Hutch who started the run of United States victories.

Wins Many Titles.

Hutchison has won a number of major titles and competitions besides the British open. In 1916 he was runner-up to "Crick" Evans for the American open championship, and in 1920 he tied for second in this event. He has won the western open several times, and in one of these tourneys he outscored the great Walter Hagen and Bobby Cruickshank by six strokes.

The Huch is a quaint character in the ancient game. He is a great player, nimble-witted and the real comedian of the links. He will be one of the favorites for the Miami open and the Miami Beach championships.

The two $3,000 tournaments here will usher in the winter golf season in the south. The first week in January will be epochal, as it will bring together for the first time in the year the outstanding professional golfers in the east and middlewest.

Miami has an elaborate golf schedule this season, and it will be inaugurated auspiciously with these two big money events.

Famous Ringmen To Bury Griffo

New York, December 10.—(United News.)—Famous figures of the fistic world will walk behind the coffin of young Griffo as honorary pall-bearers for the old-time fighter Sunday.

Tex Rickard, Jack McAuliffe, Joe Humphries, Jim Corbett, Jim Jeffries, Jack Sharkey, Frankie Erne, Benny Leonard, Charley Harvey, Patsy Haley and others will serve in this capacity when Griffo is laid to rest in Woodlawn cemetery.

Gene Tunney is sending a wreath to be placed on the casket.

Chinese Try Dog Racing.

London.—The Chinese, said to be the greatest gamblers in the world, are to have a swing at dog racing. The largest greyhound course in the Orient is being laid out in Shanghai.

Major Duncan Campbell, of London, son-in-law of Lord Barnby, has sailed for China with 185 greyhounds and an electric hare to become manager of the venture.

TomLoughran And Slattery Mix Monday

Two Pugs Meet for "Orphan Title" of Light Heavyweight Champ.

New York, December 10.—(United News.)—Two champions with but a single title will meet in Madison Square Garden Monday night, two of the new synthetic type of champions now prevalent in boxing.

Tommy Loughran, of Philadelphia, light-heavyweight champion of the world in New York state, and Jimmy Slattery, of Buffalo, light-heavyweight champion of the world by the grace of the N. B. A., will go 15 rounds to decide which shall keep the trick title.

The odds are on Loughran as the boys finish their training stints, 8 to 5 being offered that Tommy knocks Jimmy right into Tom Donahue's lap.

Buffalo Behind Slattery.

Buffalo fans are talking loudly and using long words however, in defense of Slim Jim, who a couple of years ago was as fast and clever a junior heavyweight as one could find anywhere. It is claimed for Slattery that he is a knockout artist now, one who belabors his sparring partners after the fashion of the Dempsey school.

Pat McCarty, of Boston, who has met both Loughran and Slattery recently, picks the Buffalo Arthur Murray, but the Philadelphia crowd retorts that if Pat picks like he fights that will be nothing to worry about.

"Red" Carr, Slattery's manager, says Jimmy has developed an "amazing left hand and a shortened jab which mutilates the faces of his opponents."

Tommy Not Scared.

All of which is scarcely calculated to frighten Tommy Loughran, who walked in like a little man a couple of years ago and whaled the conceit out of Jack Dempsey during the then champion's training days at Atlantic City.

Loughran, on his recent showings against Risko, McTigue and Stribling, is ready for about anything Slattery may have. The Broadway "wise money" says that Jimmy is burnt out, and that Donahue picked the wrong man for his light-heavyweight champion of the world.

U. S. to Make Cup Challenge In Own Zone

Tilden's Bid for America To Make Bid in France Is Overruled.

New York, December 10.—(AP)—The United States will issue its 1928 challenge for the Davis cup, emblematic of the world's tennis supremacy, in the American zone.

Agitation by William T. ("Big Bill") Tilden, ranking American player, for a challenge in the European zone, found no official recognition in the business of the executive committee of the United States Lawn Tennis association at its regular December meeting here today. The 15 members present voted unanimously to adopt the Davis cup committee's recommendation to challenge in the American zone.

Tilden, whose demands for a European zone challenge are said to have gone as far as refusal to represent America in case of an American zone challenge, has not so notified the U. S. L. T. A. officially, but it is understood letters and telegrams from America's leading player to other candidates seeking support in his stand have intimated that he might take such a course.

Any Countries Play.

Decision to challenge for the famous trophy that France won last year in the American zone means that America's first opponents will be drawn from North and South America, as well as any other nations which may decide to challenge here. Last year Cuba, Mexico, Canada, Japan and the United States comprised the zone.

A second recommendation of the Davis cup committee, also unanimously adopted at today's session, provided that if the United States is victorious in the American zone the Davis cup team be organized to leave this country not later than the middle of June for the European inter-zone matches.

To Enter Wightman Cup Play.

The Davis cup committee also unanimously was authorized to arrange for the Wightman cup matches in England in 1928 and to arrange with the Australian Tennis association for a series of team matches between Australia and the United States in this country "some time in 1928," provided the Australians return from European Davis cup play by way of America.

Although no official notification has been received, the executive committee has been given to understand that France plans to send one or two players, presumably Lacoste and another ranking French star, to the United States to participate in the American national tournaments. Tournament schedules will be completed shortly.

The slate of the nominating committee, it was indicated, would not be made public before the annual meeting of the U. S. L. T. A. at Chicago in February, although unofficial reports have stated that Samuel H. Collom, of Philadelphia, the present vice president, has been chosen to head the ticket.

ALABAMA GOLF TEAM SEEKS TO RECAPTURE ITS SOUTHERN CROWN

Tuscaloosa, Ala., December 10.—(AP)—The University of Alabama, ruler of the southern collegiate golf realm for five years until Georgia Tech won the crown last spring, is out to regain its title.

The links championship now under way in Dixie while the north shivers before winter's winds, already gives promise of being at least three-cornered, however, with the University of Georgia, Georgia Tech and Alabama all presenting strong teams.

Led by Gunn.

Georgia Tech's golf team is led by Watts Gunn, national and southern collegiate champion. Georgia has Charlie Nunnally, Bill and Maxwell Oliver of the "Oliver brothers trio," well-known on southern courses, and Cy Strickler as its representatives.

Alabama is starting with a team untried in collegiate play, but experienced in years on the greens, all of the team members having used the clubs since they were old enough to swing one.

Hugh Morrow, captain; Sam Perry, Harry Princhett and Charley Allison compose the team that will have the prestige won by Files and Jack Crenshaw, Bobby Baugh, Glenn Crissman and Johnny Thames to uphold. Baugh won the southern intercollegiate title one year, while the Crenshaw brothers battled it out for the same honors the previous season. Crissman was southern amateur titleholder in 1924. Baugh and Thames also played important roles in southern tournaments.

Won City Title.

Morrow and Perry won a city tournament in Birmingham last year, and the team has been averaging around 76 for 18 holes in play together.

The team last year defeated Penn State and lost to Princeton on an eastern invasion. A loss, 7 and 6, to the University of Georgia in their first match of the present season is the only dual match Alabama ever has dropped to a southern college.

Charley Hanson Proves Popular Wrestler Here

It is not every wrestler that can turn jeers into cheers. Charley Hanson did it in his appearance at the city auditorium last week, and as he is wrestling here again Thursday night he is very likely to add to his popularity with the Atlanta fans.

When Hanson came into the ring for his bout with Jim Browning last Wednesday night he was given the old razz-berry chorus by the fans, but the wrestler merely smiled in a pleasant way and went about attacking Browning.

He did such a masterful job and forced Browning to the ropts so often that the fans soon changed over and before the bout was over they were cheering for Hanson. When he gained the decision over Browning he was given an ovation.

In his Thursday night appearance at the auditorium Hanson will be pitted against a good opponent, as yet unselected, in one of the preliminaries. The main event will once more feature Paul Jones, who added to his following here by beating "Scotty" McDougal in spite of the latter's persistent and rough tactics.

Contos declared Saturday that he has several wrestlers in mind from which a suitable opponent for Jones will be selected. The Texas star appears to be even faster and stronger this year than he was last season and very likely will add materially to his boosters.

1-Legged Center, One-Armed End Star

Charlotte, N. C.,—(AP)—A center with only one leg and a left end minus an arm have just led a newspaper carrier football team through a successful season here.

Bill Stewart, pivot player, had a cork leg, but those who saw him said he was one of the fastest men in the line. Kenneth Garland played left end so his one arm would be on the outside of the flank.

TRACK CALLED LABORATORY

Has Made Great Contribution To Onward March of Industry

OF AUTOMOBILE BUILDERS

Charlotte, N. C., December 10.—(AP)—It is a thrilling, deadly game, yet with all its hazards and glamor automobile racing has made a great contribution to the onward march of the industry, believes Fred J. Wagner, patriarch of speedways since the days when the sport got its start back in the 90's.

"Automobile racing has fully justified its existence by affording manufacturers a laboratory which cannot be excelled in putting their products to a supreme test," he says. "It has given automobile men an unparalleled opportunity to observe what their cars, apart from theory and calculation, will do in the real grind."

A friendly, congenial man of 60 odd years, Wagner has little in his manner to identify him as one whose nerves have been put to the grind and test in virtually every important race since 1899. Now, however, the veteran starter says he has reached the age at which he is thinking of retiring.

Looking backward, he regards the fraternity of the speedway as clean and virile, with many brave men.

"A man must have a healthy body, steel nerves and a clear mind to make the gruelling laps," he explains. "They are noble men. I recall many who have stood out—and it is a romantic memory. Felice Nazzarro, the Italian; Victor Hemery, of Belgium; Louis Wagner, France; Dario Resta, the daredevil from southern Europe, now dead. Then, there were Barney Oldfield, Louis Chevrolet, Ralph de Palma, Ralph Mulford, Bruce Brown and many others."

During Wagner's experience, racing cars have taken a stride from the cumbersome steamers of the nineties to the trim-like special racers of today, capable of a speed of 140 miles an hour. In spite of the dazzling speed, the tracks now are much safer than the courses of past decades, he believes.

"At first," Wagner says, "it was the stock car, with many changes, used as a racer. Then came the special racers and now after a long absence the stock car bids fair to come into his own again on the track. This is because in the development of the automobile, both the manufacturer and the owner want to see what their machines will do on the racing ovals."

THIRD ANNUAL R. O. T. C. HORSE SHOW IS HELD

BY BOB SHERROD.

Athens, Ga., December 10.—The third annual R. O. T. C. horse show of the University of Georgia, held here this afternoon, was featured by the riding of Leo Mallard, of Statesboro. Mallard won the cup for best horsemanship as well as three first places.

The show contained several points of especial interest. Among them was an event, musical chairs, in which there is always one less chair than there are riders. At a given interval when the music stops each horseman dismounts and tries to grab a chair, at least one rider always being eliminated.

The ladies' gaited class attracted quite a bit of attention. The show this year differed from previous affairs in that there were fewer injuries to the participants. Over 100 University of Georgia students and 50 horses made up the show.

The Results.

Jumping contest: First, Donald Campbell, Athens; second, Steve Hunt, Athens; third, Oscar McWhirter, Athens.

Cincinnati, Ohio, December 10.—(AP)—The Cincinnati National league baseball team will leave Cincinnati for its southern training camp February 27, and start training at Orlando, Fla., February 29, Manager Jack Hendricks announced tonight. Exhibition games scheduled to be played by the Reds during the training season include:

March 10-11, St. Louis Browns at West Palm Beach; March 13-14, St. Louis Browns at Orlando; March 16 and 17, Washington at Tampa; March 26-27, New York Yankees at St. Petersburg; March 29, Birmingham at Birmingham; March 31-April 1, Nashville at Nashville; April 2-3, Louisville at Louisville; April 4-5, Indianapolis at Indianapolis; April 7-8, Cleveland Indians at Cincinnati.

Hendricks said he expected to add to the schedule one game with the Yankees and one with Indianapolis, both at Orlando.

Bill Southworth To Pilot Syracuse

St. Louis, December 10.—(AP)—Billy Southworth, St. Louis Cardinal outfielder, will manage the Syracuse club of the International league, it was announced tonight. He succeeds Burt Shotton, recently appointed manager of the Phillies. Syracuse is owned by the Cards.

Southworth came to St. Louis in 1926 from the New York Giants and had a prominent part in the pennant and world series victory of the local club that year. He suffered several injuries and played only a part of last season.

Southworth began his baseball career at Portsmouth, Ohio, and later played at Toledo, Cleveland, Birmingham, Pittsburgh and Boston before going to New York.

HAWK-EYE-ING SPORTS

BY DICK HAWKINS

Tech-Georgia Aftermath.

After spending a week at the Georgia field trials at Waynesboro, we return to the old grind expecting to find the Tech-Georgia game permanently bound in the history of football, but the aftermath is still mathing.

Even down there in the country of bird dogs and birds, where good fellows are the rule and hospitality is a religion, the Tech-Georgia game sent its influence.

In the city of Waynesboro lives a man who graduated from the University of Georgia several years ago and to whom the red and black are colors to be revered, if not worshiped. He has followed the red and black throughout its successful season and when the final blow fell he took the full force of the shock on his shoulders. BUT he never uttered one single alibi. He took his beating like a man, and he is typical of the best Georgia supporters throughout the country. One day when we were in his store he took us to his office and showed us a banner with the words, "University of Georgia, National Champions, 1927," emblazoned in black on the red background.

That pennant was made to order before the Tech-Georgia game, and when a man has to take a banner like that and tuck it back in one corner of his desk when he expected to see it flung across the nation, it is a great test of sportsmanship. And he hasn't whimpered yet.

Tech Alumni and Their Team.

The alumni of Georgia Tech are not particularly pleased with the inference coming from some directions that Tech should play any other team in the conference that she has not yet played to establish the right to claim the title. And we are inclined to agree emphatically with the alumni. While there is no hard and fast rule regarding the figuring of standings on a percentage basis, that method is perfectly fair, and such figuring will give Tech every claim to the championship. And that is that.

The December issue of the Georgia-Tech Alumnus, now on the press, is carrying this tribute of the alumni to the Golden Tornado; and some fine words of praise to the Georgia team:

"You didn't mind the weather and you didn't mind the dope; in fact, you were like that "blind horse," just didn't give a happy! Praise and congratulations are too meager to express our thoughts to the great Golden Tornado, southern champions for the year 1927, and to the coaches and to all of you, individually and collectively.

"It isn't necessary for you to establish your proof as champions of the southern conference; that you are without a doubt. The world is just as a whole and, as a rule, is quick to admit the truth and to acclaim the victor. Your supremacy is being heralded all over the country by those who came, saw, and were convinced.

"There will be a few challenges, perhaps, by some who should know that you played one of the hardest schedules in the country, sectionally and intersectionally; and who should also know that Tech never has permitted post-season games—not in its palmiest days. Your scholastic requirements are hard, very hard; all of us know that—such, indeed, makes your accomplishments all the greater.

"If defies come at this time, they come with bad grace; the time for gauntlet or "bull" throwing was prior to 2 o'clock on the afternoon of December 3. Challenges, if any, should have been presented to Georgia and to Tech, respectively, pending the outcome of that epochal battle, now a part of history. Why wait until either team disbands or breaks training?

"Georgia has one of the best teams in the country and should rate among the first three or four nationally; if any claimers, perennial or otherwise, want to indulge in honors greater than or as great as those that belong to Georgia or to Tech—well, let 'em smoke their pipe. We'll trust Tech's achievements and Georgia's splendid record, also, to the voice of the populace and to the expert observers of the nation.

"It isn't necessary for you to play anybody for the title won by you; we don't think any fair-minded person in the south is going to challenge any right you have to the 1927 southern championship. There are no "ifs" and "ands" about what you HAVE DONE, no surmises; the leading sports writers of the country will attest that fact—Perry, Trevor, Gould, Eckersall, "Biff" Jones, Walsh and a host of others; they ought to know.

"We do not acknowledge your superiors as sportsmen anywhere; you are led by one of the cleanest and finest leaders of them all. You have won YOUR laurels. Congratulations and congratulations again, and bless your great, big, manly hearts!"

Chicago Pays $10 To See Gene Eat

Chicago, December 10.—(AP)—Three months ago Chicago boxing fans rushed forward in large numbers to pay $40 a seat to see Gene Tunney box. Now they are apparently almost as willing to pay $10 a seat to hear him tell about that boxing affair and see him eat a banquet next Tuesday night. This time the customers cannot possibly be placed farther away than were the first few ringside rows in Soldier field, due to the limitations of the city's largest banquet hall.

A band, an American Legion delegation and a committee of city officials were organized today to welcome the heavyweight champion next Tuesday morning. After the banquet, which is both a celebration of Tunney's victory over Jack Dempsey in the "long count" battle and a Christmas charity affair, Tunney is expected to talk business with Promoter Jim Mullen about another defense of his heavyweight title in Chicago next summer.

Mullen is endeavoring to build up an opponent for the champion who could draw a gate worthy of a heavyweight title and Tunney is trying to find some way to box oftener than the once a year limit of Tex Rickard's program.

Carnegie Cage Outlook Dark

Pittsburgh, Pa., December 10.—With only two veterans from last season now available for this year's basketball squad at Carnegie Tech, prospects for a good season are somewhat uncertain. Several members of the football team having basketball ability are being kept out of further athletic competition either for the rest of the year or until after the Christmas holidays.

As a nucleus for this year's edition, Coach John H. Irwin has only Captain Harvey White, a forward, and John F. Hotchkiss, a guard, as veterans. Howard Harpster, quarterback on the football team, who held down the center position on the quintet last season, has decided to concentrate his attention upon his studies at least until Christmas. At that time, Stauffer, a substitute guard last year, and several other football men may join Harpster as candidates for the five.

Gar Wood Tries For New Record

Miami Beach, Fla., December 10.—(United News.)—A speed boat capable of skimming over the water at 90 miles an hour will be built by Gar Wood, of Detroit, for entry in the races here March 16-17, he announced on his arrival here.

Georgetown Faces Tough Time in 1928

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Georgetown's 1928 football schedule is to include West Virginia Wesleyan, Duke university, New York university, Carnegie Tech and West Virginia university, which will be met on successive Saturdays. The schedule, as announced today, lists Susquehana and Lebanon valley for early season games and Fordham as the last opponent of the year. Syracuse and Lafayette which had places on the 1927 schedule are not included.

Soldier Learns To Box in Prison, Gets Rich

Fort Leavenworth, Kans., December 10.—(AP)—Boxing is the "trade" learned in prison by Delbert E. Kennedy, who was sentenced to the United States disciplinary barrack here for deserting from the army.

Kennedy learned it so well that his activities have been curtailed on the ground that prisoners should not be allowed to get rich while they are supposed to be undergoing punishment.

Kennedy learned to box because the sport is a part of the recreation program at the barracks. He became so handy with the gloves that his appearance was demanded outside the prison. With a guard as his "manager," he scored several knockouts in Kansas and Missouri cities, making so much money the prison authorities forbade the practice.

Kennedy, a heavyweight, is keeping busy finding opponents for fights after February 20, when his sentence expires.

Mississippi Is Defended By Officials

Sanford Reelected President of Conference; New Schools Seek Admittance.

BY HORACE E. RENEGAR,
Associated Press Sports Editor.

Lexington, Ky., December 10.—(AP) The Southern conference meeting here today issued an "ultimatum" to the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic association declaring that it must either rescind its "unfriendly acts" toward the University of Mississippi or that no conference member would engage in further intercollegiate athletics with its members.

The declaration came in the form of a resolution and added that upon the expiration of present contracts with S. I. A. A. members no others would be entered into unless the association rescinds its acts toward "Ole Miss."

Caps Climax.

The resolution, adopted in closed session, capped a climax that was reached last night when Professor W. M. Hemingway, of the University of Mississippi, charged that the S. I. A. A. and Mississippi college, one of its members, had "grossly insulted" his institution. He said the action had taken place when Mississippi college had demanded that Charles Briggs, "Ole Miss" baseball player, be declared ineligible, although investigation disclosed the player had violated no amateur rules.

Professor Hemingway also charged that the conference members had failed to show the university the proper consideration by declining to give "Ole Miss" baseball dates asked, and then had scheduled the games with S. I. A. A. teams. The resolution today was openly a vote of confidence to the University of Mississippi.

try in Poland.

Professor Hemingway told the conference that the S. I. A. A. led by R. J. W. Provine, president of Mississippi college, and also head of the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic association, had "blacklisted" the University of Mississippi.

The Resolution.

The resolution as adopted read:

"Whereas, it has come to the attention of this conference that the University of Mississippi has been blacklisted by the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic association in spite of the fact that charges had been fully investigated by this conference through its executive committee and found not to be well founded:

"Therefore, be it resolved, that this conference advise the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic association that it regards its action toward the University of Mississippi as an unfriendly act toward this conference.

"Resolved, further, that this conference advise the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic association that no further games with Southern Intercollegiate Athletic association institutions will be scheduled after the expiration of existing contracts unless the action of the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic association with regard to the University of Mississippi be rescinded."

Dr. S. V. Sanford, dean of the University of Georgia, was reelected president of the conference. A. W. Hobbs, of North Carolina, was named vice president, and W. D. Funkhouser, of Kentucky, was reelected secretary-treasurer. Nashville was selected for the next annual meeting.

The conference also adopted an amendment to the constitution making students ineligible for conference athletic teams unless they are graduates of an accredited high school or preparatory school.

The amendment was offered by Dr. Sanford. He contended that the rule would make the status of the conference athlete more sound from the standpoint of educational qualification. It was pointed out that in the past many players have gone to conference schools, participating in athletics, who presented doubtful "units" for entrance into the college.

It was further represented that many players in this way became members of the teams who were not qualified to maintain suitable classroom work.

Conference Adjourns.

The action is regarded by observers of widespread import as many athletes have been recruited from unaccredited schools. The conference adjourned this afternoon and members began returning to their homes.

The new executive committee of the conference will be composed of Dr. Sanford, chairman; C. P. Miles, of Virginia Polytechnic institute; H. N. Edmunds, South Carolina; N. W. Daugherty, Tennessee; William Hemingway, University of Mississippi.

S. I. A. A. CONVENTION ENDS AT CHATTANOOGA.

Chattanooga, Tenn., December 10.—(AP)—The S. I. A. A., in convention here, held its last official session this morning, adjourning at noon when most of the delegates returned to their homes. Since the S. I. C. had taken no action with regard to the S. I. A. A. at that time the matter was not broached in the meeting but the motion made last night that the University of Mississippi be striken from the "S. I. A. A. blacklist" was referred to the executive committee to be considered and reported upon at the next meeting.

The executive committee of the S. I. A. A. set March 1 as its next official meeting date, the meeting to be held in Chattanooga where the S. I. A. A. basketball tournament will be played at that time.

Spencer, Winter Win Bike Race

New York, December 10.—(United News.)—Freddie Spencer and Charlie Winter, two youthful American riders, tonight won the 43rd international six-day bicycle race at Madison Square garden.

The winners covered 2,522 miles and nine laps in 146 hours of continuous riding, and amassed 737 points.

Georges Faudet and Gabriel Marcillac, red devils of France, were second, and Petri and Hill, Italian-American team, third.

Twenty minutes before the end, Spencer and Winter and Faudet and Marcillac lapped the field, giving them a two-lap lead which they maintained until they crossed the finish line.

Spencer and Winter and Faudet and Marcillac were tied in mileage and total laps, but Spencer and Winter had an advantage of 588 points.

McNamara and Georgetti, American-French team, were fourth, two laps behind, and Belloni and Debaets were fifth, also two laps behind.

AND — IN THIS CORNER

by Ben Cothran

Back in the latter part of September, when football was beginning to occupy the larger part of space in the papers and baseball—especially in Atlanta, with the Crackers being what they were—getting crowded out, Mr. Rell Spiller, who owns the Crackers, announced to all and sundry that he was going to give the folks a good ball club in 1928 by means of untying the purse strings and buying a few players.

Last week Mr. Spiller and Bert Niehoff, who bosses the team for Spiller, hied themselves out to Dallas and spent a week hobnobbing with major and minor league magnates and bought five players.

These players may turn out to be the best in the land, or they may turn out to be the best of flops. Buying ball players at a market such as they had out in Dallas is like playing the ponies on form—they may run with the dope and they may not.

But Mr. Spiller says that the quintet looked good to him, and that each man's record sounded all right.

Anyhow, here's what he had to say about each player Saturday night:

Jim Poole. He's a big fellow, says the Cracker president, and a good first baseman. He played with Mr. McGillicuddy's Athletics the first part of the 1927 season. He migrated from there to Baltimore and then to Minneapolis. His batting average hovered around .330, and Mr. Spiller believes it will be something like that this season.

Paul Strand will take Mule Haas' place in center field. He isn't quite as good a fielder as Mule, but they say he has a good arm and that he hit .329 in 200 games with Portland, of the Pacific Coast league, last season.

Russell Pence, so Spiller announces to the world, was one of the best hurlers in the Texas league during the season in which Wichita Falls overthrew the reign of Fort Worth. Mr. Pence is a rather large specimen of humanity standing something like six feet and three inches. He pitches from the right side, and it is hoped that he can work effectively with the Crackers, for whom Spiller traded Cliff Markle to Dallas.

Fred Brainerd, if you listen to Mr. Spiller, is the best player of the lot. Brainerd was at second base for Buffalo, the International league champions, last season. Brainerd brings with him the reputation of being quite adept at starting double plays. Bert Niehoff's clubs always make plenty of double plays, but last year it took Bert at the second sack to start any. Brainerd, it is understood, hit .321 last year.

Johnny Jones, coming from Rochester, where all the trouble, centering around Mr. George Stallings, occurred last year, is supposed to be a good shortstop. Jones ran off and left the clug for some time, but was brought back into the fold and finished with a fair batting average. Mr. Spiller states that Brooklyn paid $35,000 for him and then sent him to Rochester, from whence Atlanta got him.

That finishes the list of players secured last week. Last season the Crackers at times looked like a team from the Old Men's Home. We have heard that Paul Strand was pitching for Boston Braves back in 1914. Still playing, he's quite old, about 35, in fact. But then, about two seasons ago Mr. Connie Mack shoved $50,000 across the board for him, so maybe he's still able to play good baseball. Anyhow, southern loop won't be as fast as the Pacific Coast organization.

It is not known what the ages are of the others that Mr. Spiller has purchased. They may be quite old and then they may be quite young. But young or old, if they can play winning baseball that's all the Cracker fans want. They deserve a winning team next year.

Mr. Spiller won't be in town very long. He's off again today for New York, where the American and National leagues are holding their annual meeting. The Cracker boss is still looking for more players, stating that he needs a couple more pitchers and another outfielder. He expects to get them from Brooklyn, Wilbert Robinson and Rell being rather good friends.

Added to the players secured towards the close of last season, including Tom Angley, who burned 'em up in the Sally, which was productive of a faster brand of baseball in 1927 than was the Southern, Atlanta's roster will have only a very few of last year's men left. Johnny Brock will be back. Also Olson and maybe Frankie Zoeller.

On paper it looks like a pretty fair bunch Rell and Bert have gathered. Of course, as we said before, they may be old and on their last legs. But then, Rell tried a few old men last season who had good records behind them. And he found out that when a player has once been famous, but isn't any more, then "The wages of fame is the razzberry."

Mr. Spiller would like to make a good-paying proposition out of the Crackers. It takes a winning ball club to do that, so it's possible that the Crackers will finish further up the ladder next season than they did last year.

GRADUATION TAKES PLENTY AT N. DAME

Notre Dame, Ind., December 10.—(AP)—All of the first-string men, except one, will be lost through the graduation process to Coach Knute K. Rockne when he begins work on the 1928 edition of the Notre Dame football team. Fred Miller, left tackle, is the only regular on this year's eleven who is not a senior.

Captain John Smith, "Chile" Walsh, John Fredericks, George Leppig, John Poliskey, Ike Voedisch, Charlie Riley, Christy Flanagan, Ray Dahman and Elmer Wynne played their last game for the Gold and Blue against Southern California. Five members of the second team will not return next season.

With two weak freshman years in a row, football prospects at Notre Dame for next year are anything but bright. Coach Rockne faces the task of building a whole new line around Miller next season, the backfield having formidable material in Niemiec, Chevigny and Collins. There are three candidates for the quarterback position, Morrissey, Brady and McKinney, all of whom saw action this year.

GEORGIA OPENS CAGE SEASON WITH VICTORY

Athens, Ga., December 10.—The Georgia Bulldogs opened their basketball season with a bang Saturday night when they downed the Southern Bell Telephone company's quintet by a 50-to-11 score. The Red and Black defense was the feature of the game, the Atlanta five scoring only three field goals, two of them being long shots.

Captain Babe Florence was Georgia's leading scorer, running up 12 points. He scored the first three field goals of the game. Florence was closely pushed for scoring honors by Dudley Cook, who played only ten minutes. At the guard position Buck Anderson, sophomore sensation, displayed some fine defense work. Both centers, Drew and Martin, looked good at such an early date.

The Bulldogs used over two complete teams. The score at the half favored the Athenians, 18 to 5.

Radio fans who like semi-classical songs and piano solos will have the opportunity of hearing "Sweethearts," from Maytime; "Trees," by Rasbach; "Coming Home," by Willeby; "L'Aprile," by Tosti, and "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" over WSB during the Sears-Roebuck agricultural foundation broadcast between 6:30 and 7 o'clock Wednesday evening.

Fans will be asked to identify the selections and mail in their list.

The regular Monday, Wednesday and Friday dinnerbell R. F. D. club programs will take the air between 11:30 and 12:30. Paul and John, with Mrs. W. A. Wallace, and the Honolulu duo will be featured on Monday noon. Ralph Richardson, baritone, and the Long sisters will sing on Wednesday noon, while Harry Pomar's Sears-Roebuck Players and Lawrence Smith will be Friday dinnerbell artists. Mr. Smith also sings each morning at 10:20 o'clock.

The Farmers' Radio newspaper is a regular feature each Wednesday between 11:30 and 12 o'clock. Homemakers will receive educational information by radio from Mrs. R. F. Whelchel, home advisor, each morning at 10:05. "Uncle Lewis" and his Junior R. F. D. club is a Saturday morning feature at 10:25. This will be followed by a request program by Lawrence Smith and Harry Cooper.

RADIO PATENTS NOW NUMBER OVER 3,600

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Radio has set inventors going and turned many fans into inventors, so that today more than 3,600 patents have been granted which apply to radiant energy alone. Figures on the total number of patents relating to radio are not available.

Patents on transmitters numbers 222; on receivers, 307. Under receivers, antennae patents number 119; special ray, 375, and wave meter, 28.

LISTENERS ASK CHANGE IN WOQ ALLOTMENT

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—The tremendous grip radio has taken on the American people is illustrated by the attempts of fans to influence the federal radio commission in its decisions.

The most recent example was in behalf of station WOQ of the Unity School of Christianity at Kansas City, Mo. More than 5,000 telegrams and letters have been received asking a good frequency and power allotment for WOQ.

Such communications are sometimes ignored by the commission because of having been inspired by broadcast appeals.

SAYS CARUSO FIRST FAMOUS STAR ON AIR

London, December 10.—(AP)—Lee De Forest, the American radio inventor, said during a visit here that Caruso was the first famous singer to be broadcast.

This was in 1909, when Mr. De Forest, a pioneer in the development of wireless in America, made an experiment in radio-telephony from the Metropolitan Opera house, New York. Caruso was one of the artists, and his song was heard by about a dozen listeners and by a few ships' wireless operators.

Turkish Story-Tellers Find Radio Robbing Them Of Jobs

COOKS SULK IN KITCHENS

Guebzeh, Turkey, December 10.—(AP)—Radio, recently installed here, is creating the same servant problem which has been appearing throughout Anatolia during the last year in the wake of loud speakers.

Servants are up in arms over the newfangled machine which is cheating them out of one of their chief functions—that of family entertainer—and scores are leaving domestic service for lack of an audience for their oft-told but hitherto always applauded tales.

Unlike Arabin, Turkey never had professional story tellers, but has always chosen its cooks and maids with an eye to their story-telling propensities. Before the advent of radio the one amusement of Anatolian families was to gather in the evening round a brazier. The cook, proudly conscious that she was the center of all eyes, told ancient tales of djine and peris, sultans and pashas and fair Circassian slaves.

Now that the radio company at Stamboul has added to its program of Turkish and European music by putting Arabian Nights tales on the air, old retainers call down the curse of Allah on the "tin horn that talks like a man," sulk in the kitchen while their erstwhile auditors forget them, or they give notice and move to some village yet unhaunted by the new demon.

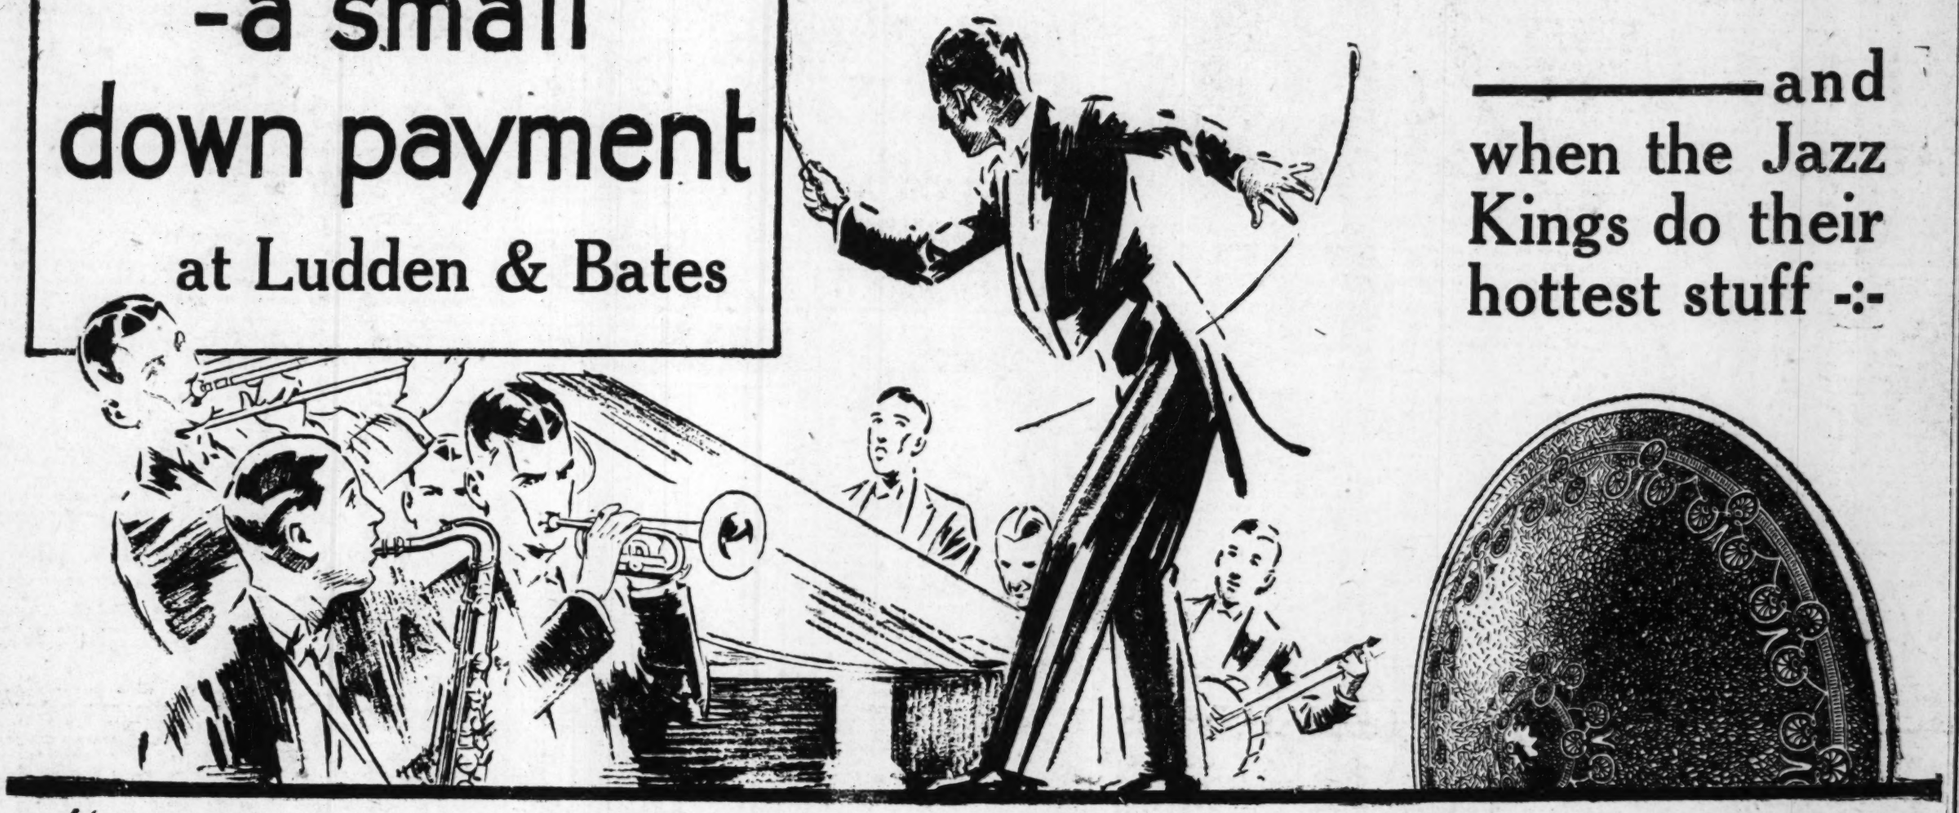

Within the last four months radio sets have increased in Anatolia from 100 to 500 and in Constantinople from 700 to 1,500.

Questions Radio Expense

Washington, December 10.—Congress may be asked to define the legality for government expenditures in purchasing broadcast advertising.

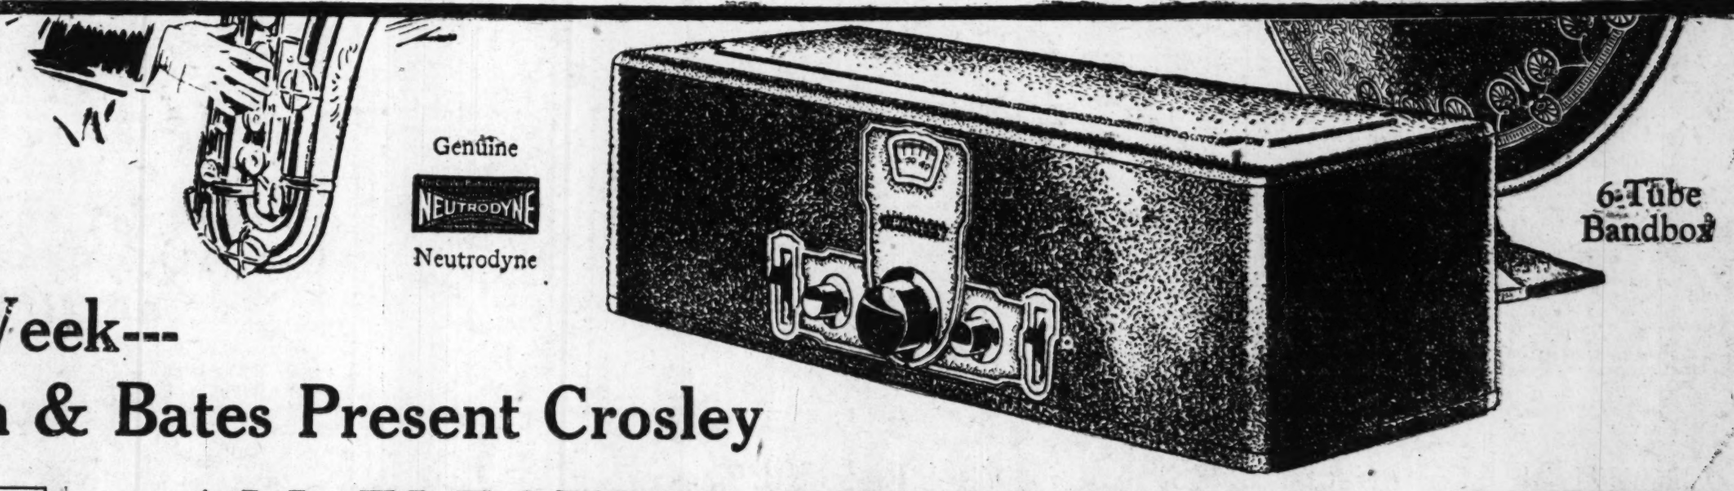

Comptroller General McCarl recently approved a payment to the National Broadcasting company for transmitting talks by Ogden Mills, undersecretary of the treasury, in connection with recall of Liberty bonds. He expressed a doubt of its propriety, however, and intimated that congress should clearly authorize or deny such expenditure.

The interest that has been evidenced in the vote on the most popular broadcasting stations which is being conducted by the Dial Twister in The Constitution daily is shown in some of the comments addressed to the radio department, several of which are published herewith:

"Dear Mr. Smith:

"I am glad you have again resumed your column about radio reception conditions for the previous night, as it gives all the rest of us fellows an opportunity to compare results with you and check up our results with yours. If we have a bad night, it gives us satisfaction to know the condition is pretty general and not the fault of our own receiver, which, by the way, I believe is second only to the Stromberg-Carlson, it being an Atwater Kent.

"In all of the different programs you have mentioned, I have not seen any reference to your having heard "Sam 'n' Henry" at WGN, Chicago. If you do not sit up until 10:10 (Atlanta time) and hear these comedians for 10 minutes every night (except Monday), you are missing one of the real gems of the ether, which, as you doubtless know, are few and far between.

"I, therefore, recommend to you highly that you invest 10 minutes of your time on WGN's wave length every night and keep up with the doings of Sam and Henry, provided you have not already been enjoying them.

"With reference to women on the radio. This is one listener from whom you will not receive the well known "raspberry," as I heartily concur in the views expressed by you, as I detest hearing a woman either talk, laugh, cry or sing over radio. Women have their place, if you know what we mean, but the farther away they stay from a microphone the better I like it.

"I am strongly in favor of a law making it a capital offense for women to go within 100 yards of a microphone unless they are strongly and firmly gagged and prevented from uttering a sound. Keep up the good work and help to run the women off the air and back to the home.

"Yours very truly,
A FELLOW DIAL TWISTER."

"Dear Mr. Smith:

"I think the 'chain' is perfectly wonderful and it's good enough for me.

"They give us the most beautiful music on the air and if we didn't ever get anything outside of the chain we would be fully repaid. As a rule the chain comes on early in the evening and after it's over we can then twist the dials and get other stations. I am strong for the chain and thank the N. B. C. Co. for the privilege of hearing such lovely music through WSB without all the grinding static.

"I am reading your radio talks and I cut out the programs every morning. I have a radiola 28 with 100 loud speaker and wouldn't take a thousand dollars for it. It's wonderful.

"Very truly,
"A FEMININE FAN."

"Will Smith,
'Care Atlanta Constitution,
"Dear Will:

"I agree with you, not in all, but a great many things. I don't see where the new allocations in wave lengths have helped very much.

"Have had a partiality for WGN, KDKA, WLS, WSM, WWNC. The Voice of St. Louis and others.

"I used to get WGN and KDKA fairly good. Sometimes they would swap positions but in the main could separate them. But now can't get either. KOIL, of Council Bluffs, positively interferes with KDKA, and several others with WGN.

It is true that I should have been able to get some stations that I never got before as for instance WJR, Pontiac, and a host of others. Oh, I forgot WLW now comes in fine but WSAI horrible.

"I believe that comparatively few sets that are on the market or that one owned, are sharp enough in tuning to separate stations, and the truth of the matter is that there are too many stations on the air.

"'I don't think that if all chain programs that are broadcast of whatever chain could be synchronized and broadcasted on identical wave lengths would help. That would enable those not caring for such programs to readily find something more to their liking. By this I do not mean that the chain stations should at all times broadcast on identical wave lengths but only when the chain programs are on.

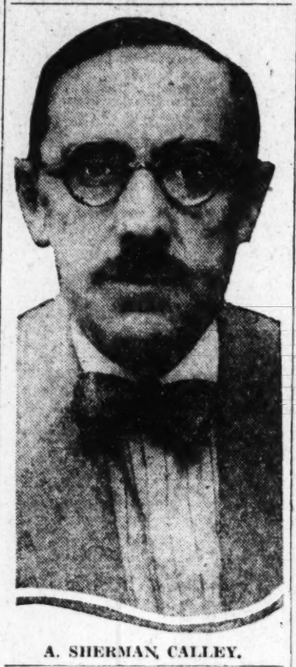

"I am not in sympathy with the station KWKH in his 'fight' for more power.

"Trust that you may be assisted by the few comments enclosed above, I am
"Yours truly,
"C. J. KAMPER."

CROSLEY SALES GROW AT LUDDEN & BATES

The demand for radio receiving sets and radio accessories as Christmas gifts this year has exceeded any other year by thousands of dollars.

This statement was made by A. Sherman Calley, store manager at the

A. SHERMAN CALLEY.

Ludden & Bates Piano company, 46 North Pryor street, who is in the midst of one of the greatest radio sales campaigns ever staged in Atlanta.

Ludden & Bates, one of the oldest music dealers in the south, retail and merchandise Crosley, R. C. A., Radiolas, Bremer-Tully and Atwater Kent radio receiving sets and accessories. The sale, however, has been built around the new Crosley A. C. sets that operate directly from the electric light socket.

"Never, in my long experience in the retail music field, have I ever seen a demand to equal the demand that is being made upon us for these new Crosley sets," said Mr. Calley in discussing the sale.

"However, one cannot be surprised because the public has reached a stage where they want radio in their individual homes and they want it without any of the messy, old batteries or tangle of wires that used to make a radio set an eye-sore to the housewife.

"Then, too, there is a heap of satisfaction in selling superior articles. No piece of radio apparatus on the market enjoys cleaner, steadier sales than does the Crosley line.

"Ever since Crosley entered the radio field their methods and developments have created a leading place for Crosley radio receivers. This condition is most surely reflected in the tremendous sales response we have enjoyed during the past two weeks."

Reports Bag Theft.

Rev. Charles Hampton, a Liberal Catholic missionary of Hollywood, Calif., reported to police Saturday night that two handbags were taken from his automobile while parked in the business section of the city.

Broadcasting Abroad

Radio broadcasting exists today in 58 countries in all parts of the world. Nineteen of these have a single station, including Ceylon, Canary Islands, Costa Rica, Egypt, Paraguay, Iceland, Morocco, Netherlands, Lithuania, Peru, Tunisia, Egypt, Straits Settlements, Turkey, Luxemburg, Salvador, Haiti, Venezuela and Hong Kong.

All broadcasting stations in the United Kingdom are owned by the government and are operated through a broadcasting commission. Expenses are paid through receiving license fees.

Exceptionally high power is used by several Russian broadcasting stations. One at Moscow shares first place among foreign nations, with the Motala, Sweden, station, at 40,000 watts.

Radio clubs operate broadcasting stations in Sweden, in cities where a company having a monopoly on commercial broadcasting has not taken action. These 19 stations generally rebroadcast program from the official company's stations, especially that at Stockholm.

Germany has 23 broadcasting stations in 21 cities, all owned by the postal service. License fees from receiving sets pay expenses.

Sweden limits broadcasting stations to one in each city, requiring licenses from receivers.

Cuba has 45 amateur radio broadcasting stations and only two others. The amateurs use broadcast wave lengths and put entertainment on the air.

Russia has instituted a number of public radio receiving stations, through which concerts are heard by the people. Mexico has experimented with the same idea.

Only one broadcasting station is allowed in each city in the United Kingdom. Twenty are operating now.

Prohibition of broadcasting exists in Rumania, Bulgaria and China.

CHRISTMAS TURKEY SHIPMENTS LIGHT

Forth Worth, Texas, December 10. (AP)—Because Texas farmers held out for higher prices, shipments of Christmas turkeys to northern and eastern markets are lighter than had been expected, Fort Worth poultry dealers declared today as the last cars were loaded.

John B. Collier, president of the Fort Worth Poultry and Egg company, said shipments from here would total less than 500 cars, whereas about 700 cars had been expected.

For the Christmas trade 28 to 30 cents a pound on the foot was paid.

PROBLEMS OF TEXTILE INDUSTRY DISCUSSED

Spartanburg, S. C., December 10.—(AP)—To discuss important problems of the textile industry, it was said, the southern division of the print cloth group of the textile institute met here today with approximately 60 mills represented.

Walker D. Hines, of New York, president of the textile institute, was in the city for the meeting, held behind closed doors. Only members of the organization here for the meeting were admitted.

Following closely the meeting of the narrow sheeting group in this city a few weeks ago, the conference today, it was believed, will have significant bearing on future conduct of the textile business in the south.

The mills manufacturing print cloth constitute the largest group of the textile industry, employing some 5,500,000 spindles and prominent textile men from all over the south came here for the meeting.

America, Tired of Listening,

:: PROMINENT LOCAL MAN SAYS SO ::

Wants to Learn to Play Piano

America is tired of just plain listening to music, according to Alvin E. Foster, vice president and general manager of the Cable Piano company, who has just completed an exhaustive survey of music in relation to the growth of radio and its effect on the public.

Mr. Foster, who is a member of Yaarab Shrine temple's chanters and a musician of note, declares that radio broadcasting of famous musicians and instrumental organizations has done much to bring about the increased yearning for musical development on the part of the individual listener.

"Every person has the desire to play some instrument," he says. "Father, mother, little Willie and tiny Helen all want to play some instrument. People have listened to music for so long that they feel that they, too, must become musical performers.

"Young people of America today are realizing more and more that the ability to make music not only opens up the avenue to popularity, but is also the means of an approach to a successful life. This ability is further identified with making and cementing friendships.

"A recent checkup has brought about the fact that there are 865,000 boys and girls studying the piano today. It may be a far cry from what our old-fashioned teachers would call studying the piano, but nevertheless it is interesting to note that the "quick piano method" music publishers and schools find more pupils available than they have facilities to handle.

"In cities boys and girls are studying the piano as never before. Piano playing contests are being held all over the country. Over 54 newspapers are carrying in their columns, free piano lessons.

"Last year 1,500 boys and girls entered a piano playing contest held in Detroit and 14,000 children competed in a piano playing contest recently brought to a conclusion in Chicago.

"New York city will soon have a contest of its own. A large New York daily is at the present time printing free piano lessons once a week and from all accounts the number of those who will register in the New York contest will be double that of Chicago.

HOME SET-MAKER IMPROVES RADIO RECEIVER DESIGN

Chicago, December 10.—The home craftsman has joined in the evolution of the radio receiver. No longer does his product resemble the haywire jumble of the past. It rivals and sometimes surpasses the commercial output in the way of modernisms.

Individual ingenuity has not been entirely responsible for the improvement, but it has spurred the home builder to greater efforts and to demand better parts. The result has been simplification in home construction work, as well as carefully designed apparatus.

While the set manufacturer has greater facilities for designing and constructing receivers, the home builder lets the parts-maker do this work for him and acts, in most cases, merely as an assembler, much on the order of the boy who buys mechanical construction toys.

The kitchen sink soldering expert doesn't have to replace expensive machinery when he wants to change the design of his receiver. All he has to do is to detach a few wires, replace a few instruments, and his receiver is radically changed. The set manufacturer must often go to great expense when such departures are made in his output. Yet the home builder and the manufacturer are far from rivals. One labors for the thrills, the other for financial returns.

Then too, the home-built set is a sort of an experimental field closely watched by factory men. It is in the home-built receiver that most of the new things first appear.

RADIO CENSOR

MRS. PHILIP SNOWDEN.

London, December 10.—(AP)—Mrs. Philip Snowden, wife of England's first labor finance minister and renowned as a hostess, is the first woman to be appointed a director of the British Broadcasting company, which censors all English radio programs.

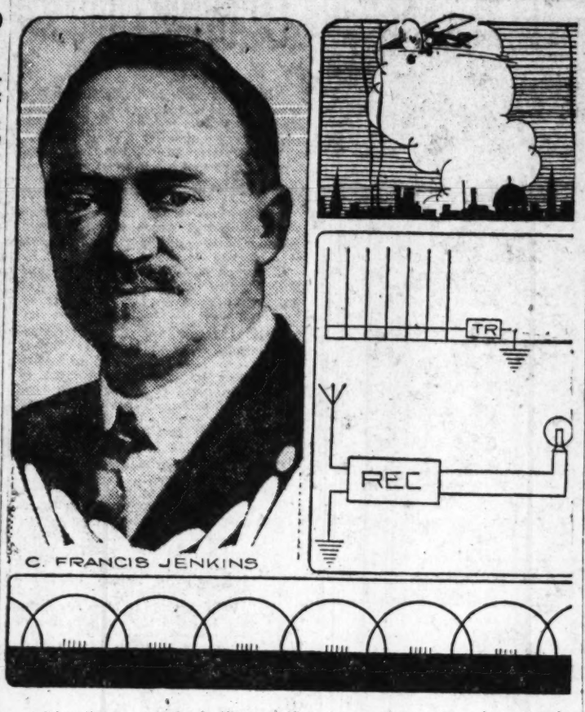

She was busy when her husband was handling the British empire's budget, but she is even busier nowadays.

In addition to assisting shaping British radio policy, she is actively engaged in social and welfare work and writing books and serving on committees of national interest.

Her hobby is music. She has a wonderful voice and her musical parties at her home are a feature of London's entertaining.

A public speaker of repute, she has attended nearly a thousand political meetings since leaving college, and she is in constant demand as a lecturer.

Invents Radio Guide For Planes

The diagram at the bottom of the picture shows the schematic elevation of the aerial roadway proposed by Mr. Jenkins for the guidance of air pilots through fog and storm. Each semi-circular area of radiated energy is about 45 miles in diameter. Stations would be about 25 miles apart. Other diagrams show vertical antennae at each transmitting station and the receiver on the plane, with lamp which assures the pilot that he is on the course.

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Radio today is expected to blaze the air trails of the future, to guide speeding planes through fog and storm and around mountains. The radio beacon already has led aviators from the California coast to Hawaii. This straight path, however, cannot well be used over land on account of the many detours in mountainous country.

A virtual aerial roadway, penetrating blinding storm and circling high peaks, is visioned now by C. Francis Jenkins, Washington inventor. The aviator would be sure of his path as log as a tiny lamp flares with radiant energy, which has been transmitted by radio stations at short intervals on the route being flown. Radio beacons at present utilize a series of sound signals, but Mr. Jenkins believes a pilot will find it easier to watch light signals, which take less attention.

Each radio transmitter used in Mr. Jenkins' system is a short-wave, low-power automatic station, and has directional characteristics making a channel in which the pilot flies with certainty. A little light on the instrument board burns bright while the plane is in the channel and dims as the plane deviates from its course.

Navigation of airplanes at present, Mr. Jenkins says, depends mainly on a sight of the ground over which the pilot is flying. Flying by night is hazardous in foggy weather, because the pilot must fly dangerously low for sight of guiding objects. The principal aim of his invention is to permit pilots to avoid possible crashes by flying well over obstructions.

This plan, Jenkins believes, is more satisfactory for the sinuous land routes from field to field than the directional radio beam stations recently set up at San Francisco and Honolulu. Objections to long straight beams as land guides are avoided by breaking up the course into short sections, which can be turned readily and can be used in either direction simultaneously.

The new automatic transmitter stations, plotted on a map, look like a string of beads laid zig-zag over the landscape, Jenkins says. They are inexpensive, costing no more than the present arc light "windmill tower" beacons which they replace successfully in foggy weather.

RADIO AUDITION CONTEST WINNERS VISIT PRESIDENT

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Ten young men and women who won the sectional honors in the Atwater Kent Foundation national audition contest were received today by President Coolidge. Tomorrow they will participate in a contest at New York to determine the national champion singer.

Those received by the president were: Marie Healy, Manchester, N. H.; Wilbur W. Evans, West Philadelphia; Marie Bronarzyk, Chicago; Harold A. Klanck, Flint, Mich.; Mary Rowe Sims, Richmond, Va.; Ben P. de Loache, Jr., Asheville, N. C.; Agnes Davis, Denver, Col.; Libero Michaletti, Galveston, Texas; Emelia de Prato, South San Francisco, and Ted A. Roy, Corvallis, Oregon.

More Foreign Stations.

Only 200 foreign radio stations were listed at the department of commerce in Washington during 1924. The number increased to 265 in October, 1925; 348 in October, 1926, and 420 in August, 1927.

BRINGS AMITY

HENRI L. ETIENNE.

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—National suspicions in Europe are lessening with the spread of radio, according to Henri L. Etienne, director of the International Bureau of the Telegraphic Union at Berne, Switzerland. M. Etienne, who helped organize the international radio-telegraph conference meeting here, believes reception of broadcast programs over the European continent increases understanding and friendship among the nations.

"Before the war, radio was practically unknown to the people," he explains. "After 1914 sending or receiving apparatus was not allowed, even in neutral countries. Aerials in Switzerland were torn out by police. But now that is all changed.

"Programs in French, German, English, Italian or Spanish can often be heard. Broadcasting at first was limited to music and the opera; but today important speeches go on the air. This helps the people to know and appreciate one another."

European and American programs do not differ much, says M. Etienne. Radio in Europe has contributed to the spread and popularity of jazz music and orchestras from the United States.

M. Etienne believes Great Britain is most advanced in European radio activity, but the United States, by virtue of organization methods and size, leads the world.

BUREAU CHECKS VARIOUS STATIONS ON TRANSMITTING

Washington, December 10.—Checking the frequency of transmitting sets is one way in which the bureau of standards cooperates with radio broadcasting stations.

Since the strict ruling of the federal radio commission that assigned frequencies be adhered to within 0.5 kilocycle, many devices used by stations to observe the ruling have been calibrated by the government standards experts.

"A broadcasting station must expend considerable money and time in order to maintain its assigned frequency," says L. J. Briggs, of the bureau of standards.

"A suitable device which will indicate the frequency at which the broadcasting station transmits can not be made up from odds and ends secured at random. This fact is not appreciated by all broadcasting station operators, as is evidenced by some of the devices sent to the bureau for calibration. The bureau has refused to calibrate any apparatus which was of poor construction or that seemed to be unreliable as a frequency standard."

Piezo oscillators and frequency meters (wavemeters) are included in devices generally employed by broadcasting stations for checking transmitting frequency. The piezo oscillator is the most accurate checker now in use, says Briggs. Frequency meters as usually constructed will not register a frequency change as small as 0.5 kilocycle and so are not suited for complying with the law. Frequency meters, unless specially designed, have been found by the bureau of standards to change their calibration without frequent recalibration.

During the past four months 46 broadcasting stations have requested calibration of piezo oscillators at the bureau. Twenty-one have sought calibration of frequency meters.

NEW VICTOR UNIT OPERATES FROM LIGHT SOCKET

The Orthophonic Victrola with the newly developed Radiola six-tube, all electric radio receiving set incorporated, is one of the greatest contributions to music and home entertainment that art and science have ever produced, according to Manley B. Robison, department manager at the Phillips & Crew Piano company.

Mr. Robison, who has just introduced this new unit to the extensive line of musical instruments carried by this well known southern music house, declares the instrument has proven an ideal solution to the Christmas gift problem.

"Radio fans can now kiss their messy old batteries goodby," he said in a statement to the press, "for the latest addition to the Victor line simply has to be plugged into an electric light socket and one may have either radio or orthophonic recordings at will.

"The instrument is new in principle, new in construction and design and new in musical results. It is natural to assume Victor would choose the best radio manufactured to combine with Orthophonic Victrolas and Electrolas. In choosing the Radiola manufactured by the Radio Corporation of America, the cycle of service is completed.

"To own one of these Victor combinations is to own the best the market affords; for every kind of music is at your immediate disposal from Victor records and from the air."

"K" AND "W" CALL LETTERS EXPLAINED

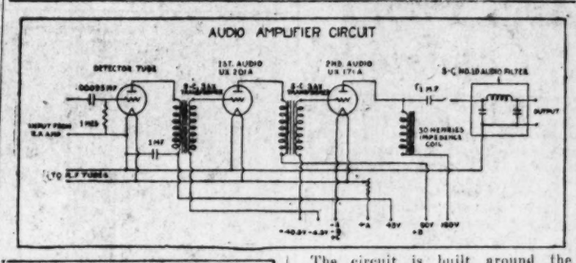

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Origin of the call-letter system for radio has interested many fans, judging from inquiries received by the department of commerce.

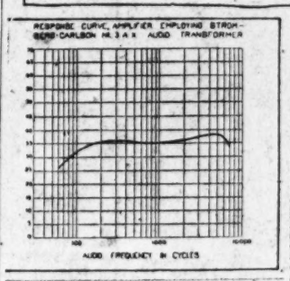

When radio was in its infancy the department assigned "K" as a call letter for the Pacific coast stations and "W" for the eastern stations. After the opening of the Panama Canal this was discontinued, but when broadcasting started the practice was resumed.

KDKA at Pittsburgh is an exception, being the first broadcasting station in the world for entertainment. It was allowed to retain its original call for traditional reasons when the department of commerce started assigning calls.

"K" and "W" predominate as first letters because the United States was assigned these and "N" by the international bureau of the Telegraphic Union at Berne, Switzerland, in accordance with the 1912 agreement.

Audio System Is Important

Transformer coupled audio amplification retains its popularity by a wide margin in spite of the many claims of superiority made by proponents of resistance and impedance amplification.

As for tone quality, correctly designed audio transformers and careful attention to the output system and tubes will produce fully as natural reproduction and with much greater volume than either of the other types.

The circuit, diagram of which is shown herewith, produces splendid tone quality, proof of which is shown by the amplification curve, which runs almost horizontally from 60 cycles to nearly 10,000. This means unusually uniform amplification throughout the entire musical range.

The circuit is built around the Stromberg-Carlson No. 3-AX transformer. There is nothing especially different in this circuit, unless it be the use of a 30-henry impedance coil in conjunction with a 1-MF or 2-MF condenser and a standard make audio filter (Stromberg-Carlson No. 10 audio filter used in this case) as output equipment.

The impedance coil and condenser keep the high voltage direct current of the "B" battery out of the fine windings of the loud speaker without hindering the passage of the audio currents to the loud speaker.

The audio filter aids in the reproduction of the low notes by cutting off the extremely high frequencies, which often cause noisy reception. A UX-171-A tube is absolutely essential in the second stage for fullest musical expression.

Another precaution taken for the attainment of best reproduction is the use of correct "C" battery voltages, 4 1-2 volts being used on the grid return of the first stage and 40 1-2 on the second. One hundred and eighty volts of "B" battery on the plate of the second audio tube insures a wealth of undistorted volume.

Any authorized Stromberg-Carlson dealer will be glad to make these changes in your present audio system, and the additional enjoyment attained from the greater naturalness of reproduction which results, will more than pay for the slight expense involved.

RADIO DEVELOPMENT IS RETARDED IN ASIA

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Pity the poor radio fan who lives in that most ancient and mysterious of continents, Asia. Even if he can afford the comparative luxury of the simplest of receiving sets, the weather gods and governmental restrictions put a crimp in his enjoyment of the "theater of the air."

A survey of world markets made by the United States department of commerce shows that Asia of all the continents has the most peculiar characteristics in respect to radio. Developments are spotty, and each country having radio facilities is isolated. With the exception of Japan, Asiatic countries have progressed very slowly in the development of radio broadcasting and receiving.

The climatic conditions of Asia, a large part of which is in the tropics, together with the restrictions placed by their various governments, prohibiting the use of both broadcasting and receiving stations, are to a great extent responsible for the slow development in radio, which has made such wonderful strides in most other countries.

The experts of radio apparatus from the United States to Asia for the first six months of 1927 amounted to $241,491 as compared with $935,221 for the year 1926. As the exports are seasonal in some of the important markets, this does not serve as a basis for predicting the 1927 total, according to department of commerce officials.

India ranks next to Japan in Asiatic radio development. The exports of radio apparatus from the United States to that country have been greater during the first six months of 1927 than during the whole of the year 1926, $15,543 worth having been exported during the first six months of 1927 against a total of $12,072 for 1926.

Dogwood Trees Planted By Georgia Ave. Pupils In School, Community

Two Hundred and Fifty Trees Set Out on Arbor Day by Pupils of Grammar School.

The whole school is trying very hard to raise their percentage in banking and last week four classes had 100 per cent in banking and four others had 90-odd percent.

Low two observed Joel Chandler Harris' birthday last week.

High two churned cream, made butter and served it on crackers.

Low three pupils are learning Christmas carols and are going to put Santa Claus and his reindeer on the sand table.

High three is painting toys in the toy shop.

In low four Harry Osborn brought two ferns to school. They have 100 per cent in Red Cross.

High four made Christmas calendars for their mothers' Christmas presents. They had 97 per cent in banking. Their bulbs are almost ready to bloom. They have a new pupil, Louise Cates.

Low five planted 72 dogwood trees.

High five visited the library. They learned how to find books on the shelves and the difference between fiction and non-fiction.

Miss Faver, our principal, has put a banking poster in the hall. Low six had 100 per cent in banking and the class got a gold star on the poster. They have had 100 per cent in banking for four weeks.

Members of Georgia Avenue high six had charge of the radio program Monday, December 5. We had piano solos, poems and songs. We also have some nice work in social science.

The ungraded class has started on their third set of blocks and have already sold two sets.

One of the most remarkable feats ever accomplished in tree planting was put over last week in Georgia Avenue school when 250 dogwood trees were planted by the children at Georgia Avenue school and in their community. All but twenty of these were planted by the fourth, fifth and sixth grade students. Miss Ada West, who teaches elementary science in some of the upper grades, originated the idea of dividing all the upper grade children into groups whose one desire in life seemed to be to plant dogwood trees and to get others to be interested in this lovely way of making their community as pretty as the prettiest when dogwood blooms.

One sixth grade adopted one fourth grade to help them in their campaign, while the other sixth grade enrolled the sympathies of the other fourth grade. For several days nothing was heard except "Are you a Lindbergh, or Chamberlain, or Bird, or Redfern, and how many dogwood trees are you going to plant on Arbor day?"

The fifth grades buzzed as they turned themselves into energetic representatives claiming to be either Georgia or Tech, and truly their enthusiasm could be compared to that with which those two noble teams battled in the mud on Saturday. One fifth grade planted 77 trees within a few days. As a fitting close to this lovely campaign a program, presented by each upper grade, was given in the school auditorium on Friday and a naturalist himself would have been agreeably surprised at the amount and appropriatenesse of the numbers presented.

As the program came to a close the fun began again, for the losing sides had to provide a party for the winners, but from the happy time of the whole number it would be hard to tell which were the winning sides.

Surely these children can never forget the meaning of Arbor day again and as each year passes let us hope that more and more trees will be planted until our beautiful city can truly be called "the beautiful dogwood city."

SPRING LOW FOUR EARNING MONEY

Leonard Whitney, of six-one, gave the class a dogwood tree. It is very pretty.

Low six-two enjoyed a visit from Miss Harralson.

Campbell Gillespie, of low five, has gone to Florida for two months. While there he will attend Coral Gables Military academy.

Low four and low five are earning money to increase the school savings.

The children of low four are watching their bulbs grow. They expect to have some blossoms for Christmas.

The children of low three have written letters to Santa Claus. They are going to select the nicest one to send to Santa Claus at Reindeer Rest.

Low two has made a sand table on the later caveman.

The children of high one are making some pretty Christmas decorations for their room.

Sidney Boroughs has brought low one a nice big basket to collect milk bottles.

'UNCLE REMUS' PAID TRIBUTE AT SCHOOL

Friday, being the birthday of Joel Chandler Harris, the school held appropriate exercises. At 12:30 regular classwork was suspended and in each rooom an "Uncle Remus" program was held. A large picture of "Uncle Remus" was presented to O'Keefe by the Atlanta Georgian, and the Parent-Teacher Association had it framed for us. Joel Chandler Harris occupies a special niche in the heart of every child and we delight to honor him. As his kindly face looks down upon us, we like to think that he will live for all-time in the hearts of little children.

F. A. Wilson - Lawrenson was the speaker at the December meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association of O'Keefe. Mr. Wilson-Lawrenson spoke most interestingly on the subject, "Recreation in the Home." Mrs. Susie Bowden Johnson sang, accompanied by her son, Charles W. McCray Johnson. This was the fourth of the very interesting programs given by the Parent-Teachers Association.

On the twenty-third of December just before school closes for the holidays, all students having an average A, B or C will be presented with cards of membership to the A. B. C. club or the "Atlanta Builders Club," which was founded by Mr. Hastings.

"Posture Week" begins on the twelfth and students who pass the test given by the physical director will be awarded "posture tags" which note that you stand and walk in correct position.

MARCIA BAKER.

JOE BROWN FORMS SCHOLARSHIP CLUB

Joseph E. Brown is working hard. We realize that we have only a few weeks until Christmas and that almost immediately after Christmas we have final exams. We don't like final exams, so we are working hard to keep out of them. To help along this good work we have organized a Christmas Scholarship club. On December 23 every pupil who is passing in all subjects will be admitted to the club and be given a certificate of membership. Watch our work these next few weeks!

Because 64 pounds of tinfoil were brought in by the pupils, Miss Hargrove, our Red Cross director, pronounced our drive a huge success. One class, 2B6, brought in 18 pounds. It takes a lot of tinfoil to weight that much.

Mr. Enloe, director of visual education, came out Monday to take pictures of our honor roll pupils. He was dismayed at the number, but finally succeeded in getting everybody within the range of the camera. Next time he may need two cameras.

EVELYN MATHIEU.

MOTTOES GIVEN KIRKWOOD SCHOOL

Our kindergartens are having wonderfully good times in their rooms. They even have a see-saw in there, and oh! how they do enjoy it! The see-saw was given to the grades by Mrs. C. Butler.

Low two made a very interesting booklet for their room. It contains the 100 per cent perfect teeth certificates, handed in to the teacher. On each page is a certificate and a story or a poem.

Our mothers gave each grade a framed copy of our motto for reading: "Books are keys to wisdom's treasure; Books are gates to lands of pleasure; Books are paths that upward lead; Books are friends. Come let us read."

Miss Pennington's class is especially interested in books this year. The mothers are planning to give each grade a shelf of books, and one of the mothers gave a dollar to start the shelf in this grade.

All the children were enthusiastic over arbor day. On account of the bad weather we could not have any exercises at Bessie Branham Park, as had been planned, but, instead, we united with the civic league and the P.-T. A. of Kirkwood, and held the exercises in the school auditorium. We were especially fortunate in having the governor, the mayor, councilmen and aldermen speak. We also heard talks by Mrs. Branham, Mrs. Parks, Mrs. Hess and Mrs. Bridges.

MARY CAMERON.

FAITH KINDERGARTEN MAKES DECORATIONS

Erwin Wall, in low kindergarten, had a happy time Saturday in Santa Claus' parade. The children in high kindergarten are very busy making Christmas tree decorations.

Low one studied trees last week and made a beautiful poster.

Low three made some pretty tree cut-outs for Arbor day. We are going to plant a dogwood tree soon.

In low four we are glad to see Miss Smith. She let us cut out scenes. Our class is sorry Hilton Wall hurt his leg and we hope it will soon be well.

Each child in high four has a chance at having the morning exercise.

We are working hard on a Christmas play in low five. We are making spelling charts and the pupils that have the best chart at the end of two weeks will get a reward.

High five enjoyed a visit from Miss Smith Friday. She helped us with our Christmas calendars. We agreed with James Dunaway when he said she had magic scissors. Her patterns were beautiful and we hope we can have some unusually good work so she will know we appreciate her help.

Low six gave an Arbor day program Monday morning.

Jim McDaniel and Marguerite Reese of low one were in one of the living pictures shown at the art exhibit at our school last Friday night.

Christmas Message From Superintendent.

My dear Boys and Girls: The Christmas season is upon us. Although there are two weeks in which we are to prepare our lessons, do our work and get ready for the Christmas holidays, nevertheless, the season is here. Our feeling, the very atmosphere about us, the decorations of our homes and stores and public buildings, the hustle and bustle of life all tell us that Christmas is really here. How shall we observe this splendid season?

First, let every student resolve that he or she will stay in school till the very last hour, and that lessons shall be thoroughly prepared, and intelligently recited. Let each of us resolve that the one Christmas present that we shall give to ourselves is to properly train our mind and our hands to do good work and to do it until the very end of the term. This is the proper observance of Christmas.

In the second place, I wish to urge our students to observe Christmas as a home festival. The very weather itself shows us that Christmas is a holiday to be enjoyed around the fireside. The idea of Christmas is the child in the midst of a family—the child Jesus surrounded by Joseph and Mary and those who came to see him. Let us realize that Christmas is the season when father and mother and children, and grandmothers and grandfathers and friends shall enjoy fellowship in the home.

Let me beg our boys and girls to look for Christmas joy within the home and around the family circle.

In the third place, the proper observance of Christmas is best demonstrated by the giving spirit. How out of place boisterous, hilarious and wicked conduct is at the Christmas season. God's Christmas gift to the world was a great, magnetic, quiet, law-abiding, inspiring LIFE. Let our Christmas be observed in such a manner that we shall give happiness, joy and peace to others. We should seek out those less fortunate than ourselves, and render to them such service that happiness may be theirs. In this way we shall find happiness for ourselves.

Always your friend,
WILLIS A. SUTTON.
Superintendent of Schools.

Girls' High School Stresses Importance of Health Work

Girls' High has been laying great stress on health during the past week. Miss Cadwell, director of physical education; Mr. Sutton, and members of the home economics department have all helped us to realize that good health is necessary to good scholarship, and therefore we are entering into the health projects with much pep and vim. During this month we are carrying on a campaign for the furthering of health through the drinking of milk. A daily record is being kept of the number of cups of sweet milk drunk by the student the day before, the goal being to drink at least one pint of milk a day. This campaign is encouraging those who drink milk to drink even more, and those who are not in the habit of drinking milk at all are encouraged in the acquisition of this health-building habit. Each class has a representative who stirs up interest in the campaign and sees that the milk chart is kept up-to-date.

On account of Mr. Sutton's earnest work in connection with the perfect teeth campaign, Girls' High is working enthusiastically toward the holiday which Mr. Sutton has generously offered to schools in which all the pupils have perfect teeth. We are getting busy, making dentist appointments, looking after our teeth and trying hard for those much-coveted dental certificates which certify that our teeth are in perfect condition. Many of the girls already have these precious slips of paper, and many classes are furthering interest in the campaign by arranging attractive bulletin boards with perfect teeth as the dominating note. We are looking forward to getting that holiday in the near future.

Many of the classes are encouraging good health in still another direction. Charts of height and weight are posted on many of the bulletin boards, showing the proper weights for all heights, and a record of the weight and height of each member of the class. In this way the students are assisted in keeping in touch with their weight and in knowing how much they should gain or lose in order to be the ideal size. Girls' High is exceedingly fortunate in having a crowd of girls who are, taken as an average, exceedingly healthy, and, later in the year, we expect a great percentage of the student body to receive health buttons, attesting the good health of the wearer, as a result of the various health campaigns.

One of the most novel features ever offered at Girls' High was presented at the freshman assembly on Friday, December 2. The main event of the afternoon was the participation in an original song contest. The purpose of the song contest was to select the best original Girl's High song and also the best original freshman song. The participants were combinations of freshman classes as follows: A-1 and A-10, A-2 and A-9, A-3 and A-8, A-4 and A-7, A-5 and A-6. Each of these combinations presented both a freshman song and a school song, and in their costumes tried to carry out the class colors—green and white. The winner for the school song contest was the A-2—A-9 combination, and their prize was a school pennant in the school colors—black and gold. The freshman song contest was won by A-1 and A-10, the prize being a freshman pennant. The prize-winning school song was to the tune of "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi," which the freshman prize winner was a song, the verse of which was to the tune of "Rambling Wreck," and whose chorus was based on "Glory, Glory to Old Georgia," a novelty which was considered extremely clever, especially considering its timeliness. Judges for the contest were Miss Whitmore, music instructor; Margaret Belle Isle, a senior, and Louise Wesley, a member of the junior class. The contest was under the direction of Mrs. Whelchel, home-room teacher of A-1, and a student committee consisting of Emma Stephens, chairman; Eunice Howsman and Madge Stewart. While the judges were pondering over their decision, the assembly was entertained by a song by Ruth Warner, and a clever dance by Margaret Selman. The song contest was a great opportunity for freshman poets to distinguish themselves, and as a source of pleasure and benefit to all.

The seniors are also doing quite a bit of work in the way of original class songs. The announcement of a senior class song contest was made by Margaret Huddleston, president of Girls' High, at the last senior assembly. All seniors are eligible for the contest and the winning song is to be printed in the 1928 Halcyon, the Girls' High annual. Miss Emma Gregg, home-room teacher of D-4, is faculty chairman of the contest, while Winifred Hubbard is the student chairman. Several songs have been submitted to the committee by various seniors, and will be presented at the next senior assembly.

MORELAND PUPILS ENJOYING LIBRARY

Elmer Bunnell and Marion Hightower had the pleasure of riding in the Santa Claus parade. We have already started making Christmas bags and decorations and all the children of low two are making lovely fruit boxes which they will fill with luscious fruit or give as presents to someone.

Mr. Sutton visited our school and gave a message which was for Santa Claus. Several children acted as messengers and delivered it.

Although the kindergarten has not fully recovered from the fire, the children are coming as regularly as ever and are starting anew.

Several grades are planning a special tribute to Joel Chandler Harris on his birthday. Low and high five are having an unveiling program of the lovely picture presented by the Atlanta Georgian. These children are also making dogwood posters.

Low six-one had a program on Arbor day which was very interesting. They have also won the attendance banner for this week.

Low six-two pupils are enjoying the library very much. Their bulbs are almost ready to bloom.

The reading circles have progressed wonderfully and already many children have improved remarkably. Everybody enjoys these Friday afternoon meetings.

Dr. Williams and Miss Johnson have just finished the examination of all the children and now we are going to try hard to get all physical defects remedied before the New Year.

OLIVIA TAYLOR.

LEE STREET HOLDS SCHOOL CARNIVAL

The P.-T. A. of Lee Street school held a carnival last Friday night. Each one of the fourth, fifth and sixth grades had stunts and tricks in their rooms which the children enjoyed very much. The ladies sold candy, cakes, creams and fancy work in the auditorium.

Low one is to give a play for the primary grades, "The Three Bears." They have a beautiful Christmas border.

Low one and two pupils are making Christmas candles.

Low four won the prize for bringing the most soap wrappers with which to buy silver for the lunch room. They also won the savings banner last week.

Miss Terry of low five is in the hospital and her class is very sorry she is sick. Miss Archer is filling her place.

In low six the pupils have drawn names for their Christmas tree. They observed Uncle Remus' birthday, December 9. Willis Jackson had charge of dramatizing an Uncle Remus story.

The ungraded class is busy getting ready for the P.-T. A. sale next Tuesday.

ERNEST LYNN HARMON.

Tech High Stages Minstrel At Woman's Club Tuesday

The cork makeup, dusky colored artists at Tech High's minstrel group put on a show last Tuesday night at the Atlanta's Woman's club auditorium. Skits, jokes, dances and all of the new popular songs were featured. As a special attrraction Chester Wickersham Kitchens, boy marvel, played several banjo selections.

A dance was given after the show by the Tech High jazz orchestra in honor of the '27 football team.

The Junior Red Cross sent representatives to Tech High last Friday and made several interesting talks on what the Red Cross is doing, etc. The next day the whole school went 100 per cent.

Basketball practice will start Monday. Joe Stearns, all prep guard, is the captain. Tech High is indeed fortunate in having back "Pap" Terrell, Joe Chandler, Joe Dobbs, "Heavy" Hammond, Jeff MacMillan, Jimmy Borom; Jonah White and Harold Davis from last year's prep championship team. Tech High, with this bunch of basketeers behind her, expects to cop everything from city prep to Southern championship this year.

W. T. H. S., the Tech High broadcasting station, is nearing completion and it will start broadcasting programs sometime in the near future.

The sponsors for 1927-28 school year have been selected. The Tehisean, the annual of the school, has selected Miss Gates Eckford as sponsor. The regimental sponsor is Miss Frances Simpson; first battalion, Miss Lucile James; second battalion, Miss Lucile Counts; band, Miss Frances Allen; rifle team, Miss Bess Weddington; company A, Miss Bess Weddington; company B, Miss Catherine Martin; company C, Miss Adolyn McClatchey; company D, Miss Vernon Ogletree; company E, Miss Margerite Anderson; company F, Miss Katherine Cox.

Several of the fraternities have chosen sponsors. The Kappa Delta Kappa, Miss Jane King; Theta Kappa Omega, Miss Myrtis Corker; Alpha Pi, Miss Nell Harris.

The Tech High chapter of the National Athletic Scholarship society of secondary schools met last Friday and elected officers for the school year. Frank Terrell was elected president; Tom Sanders, vice president, and Bill Wise, secretary and treasurer. To gain admittance into this society the student must make an athletic letter and also make a high average in his studies.

TOM R. SANDERS.

HEALTH TALK AT MARIST COLLEGE

On Saturday morning, December 3, the Marist cadet corps participated in the Santa Claus parade. As the parade was not during school hours, and was therefore voluntary on the part of the cadets, it was gratifying to see the large number that turned out in spite of the inclement weather.

Monday afternoon the students of Marist college had the privilege of listening to an entertaining and instructive talk given by Dr. Phipps, a well-known authority on health. Dr. Phipps has lectured in schools of almost every state in the union. He chose for his subject "The Value of Milk on the Diet of the Growing Youth."

Another individual competitive drill was held during the week. It was won by Cadet Meuritt, of Company C.

HOKE SMITH WAGES ATTENDANCE CAMPAIGN

The school is now waging an intensive attendance campaign, which is to last till January 27, the close of the first semester. The class secretaries are keeping a weekly record, filing them in the office, and the class having the best record will be awarded a handsome pennant.

Next week an election of officers for the student body will be held. Interest is runnning high, and we are anxiously awaiting the announcement of the nominees. Each class is to select two pupils, and the all-grade council will select the two tickets, upon which the entire school will vote. We always enjoy the speechmaking which marks these contests.

The birthday of our beloved "Uncle Remus" will be celebrated December 9, and our library has on exhibit many interesting pictures and articles pertaining to him. We deeply appreciate the new portrait of Joel Chandler Harris, given the school by the Uncle Remus Memorial association.

The December meeting of the Parent-Teacher association will be held Friday night, December 16, and all friends of the school are urged to attend, an interesting program having been planned by W. A. Vernoy, third vice president of the association.

Weekly Debate Programs In Boys' High Classrooms

Weekly debate and declamation programs continue to feature the work at Boys' High school, and rapid progress in the art of public speaking is being made by students of the institution. Last week's debate was concerned with the practice of instalment buying as developed in the United States in the last ten years, its social and economic effects being considered. A wide variety of decisions was evident in the home classes, as might well be expected.

These debates and declamation programs find their climax for the year in the Christmas exercises of the Alciphronian Literary and Debating society, for which competitive try-outs are held each year. This year's program has already been arranged and will take place at the auditorium-armory on Tuesday, December 20.

Production of "Three Live Ghosts" is promised by the Dramatic club in January, the first week after the Christmas holidays. A capable cast is hard at work now, rehearsing the play every day.

The annual cross-country run that was scheduled for last week was postponed until the first of next week, and on Monday afternoon Boys' High students will compete for the cakes that are awarded to the winners.

Seminary Students Present Fine Program Saturday

On Friday morning, December 9, the student body of Washington seminary enjoyed a most artistic recital given by girls in the departments of music and expression. Those taking part were: Mary Bernie Alston, Elizabeth Everett, Emily Mathews, Lily Pace, Louise Moore and Jane Tway, who gave piano numbers. An interesting piano number was the Hansel and Gretel Suite by LeRoy Campbell, which consisted of ten pieces. Miss Cooper explained the story and Roger Mae Maiden, Alline Tolbert, Elizabeth Whitten, Elinor Smith, Caroline Hogshead, Elizabeth Jones played the suite. The violin number was played by Florence Bryan. Suzella Burnett and Betty Matthews sang two lovely songs. Joe Beth Apperson and Louise McIntyre gave readings.

Washington seminary felt highly honored when they were asked to entertain the Junior Red Cross last week. During the first part of the meeting, which was held on Tuesday, the business was discussed. It was announced, among other important things, that twenty Christmas bags had been filled for the disabled veterans at Fort McPherson. All the representatives were urged to impress upon their schools the great need of saving even small bits of tinfoil. Then Miss Emma Scott served delightful refreshments to the guests. The seminary hopes that all who attended the meeting will again honor the school with their presence.

There is one time, at least, when all the seminary students in the academic department are especially glad that they have chosen Washington seminary for their alma mater, that is when they attend one of the parties which are given for the freshmen, sophomores, juniors and seniors, by Miss Emma Scott and faculty. Every girl who has the pleasure of going to one of these entertainments is sure to go the next time she is invited because she knows how much fun is in store for her.

On Saturday morning, December 3, all the members of the freshman class in their Sunday clothes, assembled in the parlors of the school. All the faculty were there, in their "Sunday clothes," to receive them. As the freshmen had never attended one of Miss Emma's parties they had one of the most pleasant surprises of their lives.

After all the guests had arrived they began to play heart dice, and everyone entered into the gay spirit which the teachers radiated. They ate lovely white and yellow mints, at which the Tech devotees gazed lovingly while the Georgia followers feasted their eyes upon the red and black heart decorations (for Miss Emma wisely held the seminary to a would-be impartiality just before that eventful game). Between games the punch bowl, attractively arranged on a beautifully decorated table, was very popular. After the playing, the faculty served the guests, much to their delight, the most delicious refreshments. A grand climax was reached when Miss Emma distributed the prizes. The unlucky ones regarded enviously the Washington seminary memory book, which Madeline Krigley received for high score, the seminary correspondence cards given to Margaret Mills as a booby prize, the lovely blue beads which were Mrs. Starke's consolation gift, and the school stationery awarded to Miss Perry for the faculty's highest score.

From what the guests said later, they certainly meant it when they told their hostesses they had a grand time. The upperclassmen are looking forward to their parties with great eagerness, and you may well say that they will not be disappointed.

BRICK FINISH GIVES HAYNES MANOR HOME COMPLETE ASPECT

Transformation "Miracle" Shown by Model Dwelling

Constitution's Second Demonstration Undertaking Making Rapid Progress; Work Centers on Brick Veneering After Final Touches Are Added to Tile Roof.

BY ERNEST RUBIN.

Above the lofty and picturesque lot on Peachtree Battle avenue, in the beautiful Haynes Manor subdivision, a model dwelling has risen into the skyline.

There, with The Constitution's second model demonstration home nearing completion on the exterior, visitors to the site at the end of the week saw what seemed to be a miracle of transformation. What shortly before was just a high, sloping corner lot seemed overnight to be changed into a residential dream spot.

While workmen of the Atlanta Realty and Construction company, well-known builders erecting The Constitution's second home, have toiled for several weeks with the greatest skill and the utmost swiftness and careful building will permit, the layman driving by the Haynes Manor site was never so much aware of the progress being made until the exterior finishing materials were added last week.

Standard Materials.

Brick veneering work and tiling of the roof, which occupied the center of construction activities during the past seven days, gave the Atlanta public its first real vision of how the Haynes Manor dwelling will look when it is completed under auspices of The Constitution, cooperating with the Home Owners' institute, of New York, in a national campaign to encourage better building and demonstrate the great ultimate saving in using standard materials in construction of the home together with expert building and planning. In this particular undertaking southern products that are known throughout the length and breadth of the building trades are being applied almost exclusively.

In a visit to The Constitution home in Haynes Manor during this stage you see for the first time the Kentucky colonial brick exterior.

It was selected in the scheme to obtain a perfect harmony between the southern colonial design adopted for the model home and the materials composing the house. On the scaffold near the top of the outside walls, you see the proverbial rival of the college professor in salary ranks displaying his skill with the trowel, mortar and brick. He and his companions are laying a four-inch brick curtain wall on the outside of the storm sheeting. It is tied to the sheeting by galvanized wall ties set in mortar between every fourth or sixth brick and about two feet apart, making for durability and permanence, qualities that are among the most desirable in a residence.

Varied Shades.

You have been told that various methods of laying brick are in practice among buildings. Here you see the so-called American bonding method being employed to add to the strength and external beauty of the house. The brick is an all-southern product, and like the mortar was obtained through the R. O. Campbell Coal company. The brick is the Kentucky Colonial brand manufactured by the Corbin Brick company, in Corbin, Kentucky. It is the sand-faced colonial type containing in its select clay iron and coal shale compounds that produce those dark rich shades that have won your admiration when ever seen. As a result you will find in the four brick walls about twelve different shades, varying from the strong red to a near black. They give the house the appearance of being made of the old hand-manufactured brick and inject a mellow vistage that it would ordinarily require fifty years to gain.

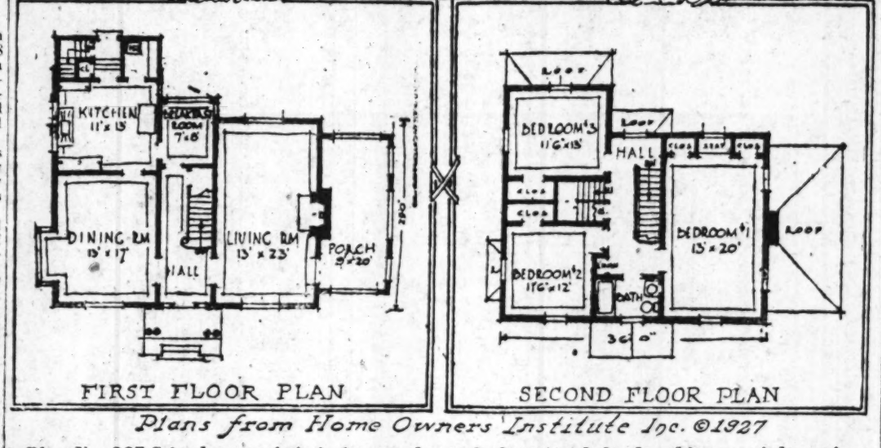

The mortar is made up of a clean mixture of high-grade cement, sand and lime, well burned. An added effect of beauty is obtained by what a workman on the lot will tell you is the raked mortar joint; that is the mortar is scraped below the outside surface of the brick, leaving small grooves between each layer of brick.

You wonder why the materials and the architectural design harmonize so well. One of the workmen will explain that southern pioneers used the materials close at hand and with these they developed a type of architecture that was most suitable both in point of beauty and durability. In the Constitution's second model home this process will be repeated. The truest southern style of architecture was selected and materials are being used that come direct from southern soil and southern environs.

Follow the construction progress of this model home. Information that will be valuable to you in building or selecting a house will be set before you. Visit the scene of the building in Haynes Manor and read the description on this page each week.

Economy Emphasized in Maisonette Design

Plans from Home Owners Institute Inc. ©1927

Plan No. 287-S is characteristic in its steeply pitched roof and slender chimney of the maisonettes of modern France. The designer is Arthur Bates Lincoln, consulting architect of Home Owners Institute. Complete blueprints and specifications of our house plans, ready to build from, are available to our readers at low cost

Comfortable Modern Home Plan Is Developed From the French

Square Shape of House Gives Economical Interior Layout—Large Main and Supplementary Rooms Feature of Arrangement.

BY L. PORTER MOORE,
President, Home Owners Institute, Inc.

Plan No. 287-S, designed by Arthur Bates Lincoln, consulting architect of Home Owners Institute, Inc., derives economy of layout from the square shape of the body of the house, and this same square shape enhances the architectural fidelity to the French "maisonette" type of home, of which it is an adaptation. The actual space content is 33,000 cubic feet, and every inch of this space directly contributes to the utility of the interior. The construction is intended to be brick veneer and stucco.

The layout is of the conventional central-hall type. A pleasant vista through the porch, doorways and hall enhances the comfortable character of both living and dining rooms. The main rooms are all of good size and all have cross ventilation. They are supplemented by plenty of auxiliary space, including generous closet provision.

Steel Casements Used.

The large inclosed porch is equipped with steel casement windows of large size and its placement makes it directly contributory to the pleasantness and usefulness of the living room.

The main facade of the home gains considerable dignity and good proportion from the window and entrance door detail. Circular relieving arches with stucco fill cap each window, and the entrance doorway and porch are graced by fanlights and sidelights around the door.

A copper-roofed bay increases the floor space of the dining room and forms an attractive exterior feature at one end of the house.

The outline of the specifications recommended for this home by Home Owners institute is as follows:

Masonry—Concrete footings under all walls, as shown on drawings. All foundation walls to be of concrete block or poured concrete made with Portland cement. Concrete to be mixed with water-proofing compound. Exterior walls of common brick veneer and stucco, as shown on plans; Chimney of common brick, all flues lined. Fireplace of selected brick; provide ash dump with clean-out door in cellar.

Incinerator—Built-in incinerator to be installed in chimney, with receiving hopper door located in or near the kitchen for disposal of garbage and trash.

Carpentry—All framing lumber shall be well seasoned and free from large knots, either Douglas fir or yellow pine. White pine for exterior millwork and interior trim; oak floors; steel bridging for floor joists. Interior doors and built-in kitchen cabinet as required in detailed specifications.

Hardware—Owner shall furnish all finishing hardware for doors and windows, for closets and casework. The contractor will furnish a correct list of hardware and is to put it on in a careful, workmanlike manner. All hardware on exterior openings to be of brass or bronze.

Stucco Work—Where shown on plans walls shall be finished with three coats of Portland cement stucco. Finish coats colored and textured as directed.

Casement Windows—Steel casement windows may be used at owner's option.

Plastering and Lathing—Three-coat work over metal lath is recommended. A less expensive job may be obtained through the use of one-half inch of plaster over flat rib expanded metal lath or alternate bids on metal lath and wood lath. Insulating lumber or plasterboard may be used if desired by owner.

Metal Work—Gutters, rain-pipes, valleys and flashing to be sixteen-ounce copper.

Roofing—Roof of asphalt, slate-surfaced, coppercad or asbestos shingles; to be laid in accordance with manufacturer's instructions.

Painting—Strictly pure white lead and linseed oil in proper proportion, with zinc oxide where desired, or a good grade of ready-mixed paint shall be used. Interior trim to receive two good coats of flat paint and one coat of flat enamel. Finished floors to be varnished or waxed throughout as directed.

Electrical Work—Complete system of electrical wiring from meter to all outlets, including all panel boards, junction boxes and other fittings. The installation must be in accordance with the rules and regulations of the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

Plumbing—A complete system and fixtures ready to use shall be provided, as shown on plans and in accordance with local regulations. Brass piping for hot and cold water lines. Gas or coal fired hot water heater. Where sewer connections are not available use of reinforced concrete septic tank recommended.

Heating—Steam, hot air or hot water boiler; coal, oil or gas fired.

Tile Work—Tile floors and wainscot in bathroom, with built-in china accessories.

Temperature Control—Heat regulator with eight-day or one-day clock thermostat, limit control on boiler or furnace and electric or spring motor.

Insulation—Throughout with insulating building board (or insulating quilting if preferred) used as plaster base on ceiling operates as roof insulation.

FURNISHING THE HOME ∴ MARIAN MOORE

WHEN BUYING FLOOR COVERINGS

The most encouraging thing about the study of interior decoration is that after mastering a few fundamental principles one can actually apply them to the solution of one's decorating and furnishing problems. See, for instance, how they take all the guesswork out of selecting floor coverings. There are four points to be considered, regardless of price, as these points can be embodied in a very modest carpet, or be manifestly ignored in the most expensive rug. They are:

1. Color.
2. Value of tone quality.
3. Pattern.
4. Serviceability.

1. Color. Obviously every object or surface in a room must have hue; in determining that hue there are three possibilities: it belongs to the color scheme and therefore plays an active part in the decoration of the room; or it does not belong to the color scheme, therefore has no place in the room and should be eliminated; or it is neutral, therefore plays no part in the color scheme, but may be useful as a background. Neutral surfaces are necessary to blend, relate or tone down other colors, but used too generously they smother the color scheme. Good decoration depends on working out a scheme in which the color elements are properly balanced by neutral areas. It is evident, then, that a neutral gray, tan or taupe rug, while quite safe, will also be a nonentity in the color scheme as it will contribute nothing to it. Try, instead, to plan your walls, fabrics and floor covering so that they all concur in creating a pleasing ensemble, based on the laws of color harmony. The bedroom pictured herewith furnished an excellent example of a scheme well planned and executed. The walls are peach-colored—a warm hue chosen to warm up the cold light from the two north windows. The rug is deep green, sprinkled over with rosebuds, the green furnishing the contrasting color (to the walls), and the pink rosebuds tying it into the wall color.

Throughout the furnishings the warm hues of peach and rose predominate, touches and splashes of green being introduced for variety and interest. The draperies feature a green, yellow, blue and orchid figure on a peach ground. The chaise lounge is in light rose with a jade-green pillow. The bedspread is peach color with soft green and mauve in the design.

With pale green walls the floor covering should be rose, mulberry, plum or raisin in color. With cream or ivory walls the rug may have as its dominant hue, blue or brown or tan, etc. Of course black, taupe and gray, being neutral, may be used in any color scheme.

2. Value or Tone Quality. You may recall the fundamental law of floors, that they should be darker than the walls; this applies to the rug also, since it takes the place of the floor. This law applies more especially to the downstairs rooms. Lighter tones are acceptable in the bedrooms.

3. Pattern. You no doubt remember that pattern represents the life and motion element in a decorative scheme, therefore should be generously provided. If the walls are plain the rug should have plenty of vigorous pattern, embodying the colors of the room on a suitable background determined as under rule 1; if, on the contrary, the walls are hung with figured paper, a tone-on-tone pattern will be advisable for the rug, so as to supply the necessary life-element without exaggerating the feeling of movement. This does not mean that the rug should be neutral, but that only two tones of one color should be selected for contrast with the wallpaper pattern. Plain rugs are not advisable, under ordinary circumstances, because they lack character and vitality, and also because they show foot tracks, spots and stains too readily. An all-over figure combines the liveliness of pattern with the restfulness of repetition, therefore tends to stablize a very lively room, one, for instance, that contains painted furniture and vigorous pattern on drapery and upholstery fabrics.

4. Serviceability. Here price may prove to be the deciding factor; but one should realize that beauty and quality are not necessarily imported qualities, so that by patronizing domestic industries each dollar spent may really purchase one hundred cents' worth of merchandise. Right here in America we are manufacturing rugs that are moderately priced, yet conform with our practical and esthetic needs. I am speaking of Wilton rugs, of which there are two grades:

1. Worsted Wiltons, which range in price from $95.00 to $150.00 for a 9x12 foot rug, other sizes in proportion;

2. Wool Wiltons, priced from $75.00 to $95.00.

Names such as French Wilton, Royal Wilton, Anglo-Persian, Servian, Bundhar, Home Crest, etc., are mere trade names and all come under the above classifications. When purchasing a Wilton rug, you may always be sure of value received, and the only considerations are: the price; the size; the four rules stated in this lesson.

Chenille rugs are higher priced than Wiltons, though the latter, price for price, are more durable. The chenille pile is deep and luxurious, and such rugs come in widths up to 21 feet.

Axminsters are tufted rugs, like Wiltons and chenilles, but are more loosely woven; their price ranges from $40.00 to $60.00, size 9x12. They are the best value in their price class.

Of course genuine Oriental rugs are always desirable, but are far too expensive for the average family. Beware of cheap Orientals, which are defective in color harmony, crude in pattern and machine-made, of course. Wiltons at half price are more serviceable and more beautiful because they are copied from famous museum masterpieces.

Since the advent of the vacuum cleaner, carpets have been increasingly popular; they are always useful in bedrooms and halls; they make long narrow rooms seem wide and help small rooms to appear larger. However, the drawbacks of a plain carpet are the same as those of a plain rug; a small all-over pattern is most advisable.

MARIAN MOORE'S ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS.

Question.—What kind of light should be used outside the front door?

Answer.—A small inconspicuous fixture of a design suitable to the architecture of the house should light plainly the street number and the steps.

Question.—What do you think of the specially shaded reading lamps that are sometimes hooked over the headboard of the bed?

Answer.—I think the table lamp is a little more decorative than the kind you describe; beds, nowadays, are so very well designed that it is a pity to break the lovely lines of the headboard with any kind of light fixture.

Question.—I should like you to tell me where to place the lights and baseboard outlets in my sunroom, and what kind of fixtures I should select.

Answer.—The rules governing the lighting of the living room also apply to the sunroom. More colorful shades are permissible, also less conservative designs than in the other parts of the house.

KIWANIS STARTS ON 1928 PROGRAM

Chicago, December 10.—(AP)—An enlarged program of work in 1928 to provide for a broader application of Kiwanis cooperation in the building of communities throughout America and Canada was formally started today as the annual international council session ended.

Governors-elect from 29 districts will be the chief leaders in the new program, which will be carried by them to all Kiwanis in the governor's districts.

The three-day conference was closed with a statement from H. C. Heinz, of Atlanta, international president, outlining the new year's work.

"The results of the discussions of the three-day session of the international council meetings," he said, "have brought to the 29 newly-elected governors who take office January 1, the realization of the work to be done in the United States and Canada during 1928.

"The building of new Kiwanis clubs will go on, the underprivileged child work is to be increased, as will vocational guidance and other activities. The year 1928 will be one of accomplishment for Kiwanis international."

Officers said that one of the most important steps taken was that of spreading the work among underprivileged boys to include the young girls of America.

Negro Confesses 'Murder' of Man Who Recovered

Chicago, December 10.—(AP)—A faked "lie detector" won an admission from a negro prisoner that he had killed another negro in Atlanta, about a year ago, during a holdup.

Detectives arrested several men last night and while questioning them at headquarters, one gave his name as John Fletcher, 45, and his home address as 140 Grace street, Atlanta. The negro was very nervous during the examination.

Sergeant Walter Storms, standing behind the negro, took his pocket knife and laid it on Fletcher's head.

"You're not telling the truth," the officer exclaimed. "This lie detector has jumped up to 80 and tells me you killed a man."

"Oh, Lawsy," quavered the negro. "I did kill a man in Atlanta, but I only got a dollar."

Fletcher said he had killed Howard Johnson late in January, 1925, when he went into the restaurant of Bertha Davis to get a sandwich. While there, Johnson entered and flashed a large roll of bills. He resisted Fletcher's attempt to hold him up and was stabbed.

Police records in Atlanta reveal that Fletcher was wanted for assault with intent to kill in connection with the holdup, that his victim recovered from the wound, and that he must have confessed to a murder he did not commit.

INDIANIAN TO FIGHT FOR COMPROMISE ON FARM RELIEF

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Representative Purnell, of Indiana, ranking republican on the house agriculture committee, discussed farm relief with President Coolidge at the white house today and indicated later that he was prepared to fight for a compromise measure which could secure the approval of both the president and congress.

The fact that Senator McNary, of Oregon, chairman of the senate agriculture committee, had reintroduced in a modified form the McNary-Haugen farm relief bill which is in disrepute at the white house, was noted by Mr. Coolidge during the conversation, Mr. Purnell said, and the president reiterated his hope that legislation would be passed to help the farmer which would win his approval.

"DRY" CAMPAIGN ON NIGHT CLUBS TO BE CONTINUED

Boston, December 10.—(United News.)—Continuing their "dry" campaign against Boston's night clubs, federal authorities announced today that padlock proceedings would be started against 22 more establishments within a week.

Such action already has been taken against Moulin Rouge, Cocoanut Grove, and Le Chateau, three of the city's biggest night clubs.

Assistant United States Attorney Elihu Stone described this as "only a beginning," and declared that an extensive campaign was contemplated to rid the city of "liquor nuisances."

The action against the three establishments already named was taken on the basis of charges that ginger ale and cracked ice had been served with the knowledge that they were to be used as highball ingredients.

U. S. URGED TO PAY FULL FLOOD COST

New York, December 10.—(AP)—The entire burden of the $300,000,000 Mississippi river flood control program should be borne by the federal government without apportionment of expense among the valley states, two United States senators from southern states contended today.

President Coolidge's flood control message to the present congress was termed "pretty language" and its suggestions "impracticable" by Senators Frederic M. Sackett, republican, Kentucky, and Joseph E. Ransdell, democrat, of Louisiana, who addressed members of the National Republican club on flood relief measures.

PLAN OF COOLIDGE IS HIT BY HAWES.

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—The recommendations of the administration for keeping the flood waters of the Mississippi in check, Senator Hawes, democrat, Missouri, declared today, have fallen short of what the people of the valley have been led to expect by representatives of the president.

Instead of embodying constructive policies the present proposal means merely that the "pork barrel, log rolling method" of meeting the river problem will be continued, he said, terming it a keen disappointment to those interested in flood relief.

"What America demands is not a continuance of the pork barrel, shifting, vacillating and heretofore inadequate program," he continued, "but a new, definite, comprehensive and effective policy of flood control in the Mississippi valley."

$200,000 IS GIVEN DUKE BY C. C. DULA

New York, December 10.—(AP)—A donation of $200,000 to the endowment fund of Duke university, Durham, N. C., by C. C. Dula, president of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco company, was announced tonight at a dinner of Duke alumni here. Dula was a friend and business associate of the late James B. Duke, founder of the university.

COLLEGE TEACHER WILL "MODERNIZE" HOMER'S ODYSSEY

Nashville, Tenn., December 10.—(AP) Now comes the modernization of the Odyssey and Homer's great lyre will twang to young people of today in their own language.

Professor R. H. Hiller of Wittenberg College, Springfield, Ohio, United Lutheran faith, to give a modern translation to the Odyssey, will take out the ancient terminology and replace it with the vocabulary of today.

"Thou wouldst" and "methinks" will go the way of all archaic expressions and Professor Hiller believes the youth of today will get a kick out of the reading.

UNFILLED ORDERS FOR STEEL INCREASE

New York, December 10.—(AP)—Unfilled orders of the United States Steel corporation at the close of November amounted to 3,454,444 tons, an increase of 113,404 tons compared with the end of the preceding month.

DYNAMITE LOVER INDICTED BY JURY

Ottawa, Ill., December 10.—After investigating the charge that Hiram Reed, 24-year-old Mossville farmer, placed dynamite in the Pleasant Valley school house stove in an effort to kill his sweetheart, Iola Bradford, because she was to become a mother, a special LaSalle county grand jury today returned four true bills against Reed.

Judge Edgar Elridge fixed Reed's bonds at $5,000 in each of the four cases, and Thomas O'Mara, one of Reed's lawyers, said that Reed probably would post bonds and obtain his release from custody on Monday.

The indictments charged Reed with assault with intent to kill Miss Bradford, with damaging a building by an explosion, with causing damage to a building by an explosive to injure the occupant, Iola Bradford, and with causing damage to a building by an explosion to injure the occupant, Grace Johnson, the nine-year-old school girl who was in the building at the time of the blast.

Six witnesses were called by the state to obtain the indictments. These witnesses were Dr. S. G. Peterson, Miss Bradford's physician; Mr. and Mrs. Howard Clegg, the sister and brother-in-law of Miss Bradford; Gace Johnson, and Joseph Ward, and Frank Liptak, Streator state highway police officers.

MISSIONS BOARD CREATES SPECIAL GIFT DEPARTMENT

Nashville, Tenn., December 10.—(AP) A special department for the purpose of receiving bequests or gifts for endowment purposes has been created by the board of missions of the Methodist Episcopal church, south.

The bequest department, organized on a plan advanced by a large insurance company, will be in charge of J. F. Rawls, treasurer of the board, and will conduct correspondence with persons desiring to perpetuate their memory by gifts to the mission work.

Wife Slays Self When Hubby Finds Faults on Xmas List

North Pelham, N. Y., December 10, (AP)—Andrew C. Foster objected to the length of his wife's Christmas list last night and when he arose this morning he found her dead on the kitchen floor with the gas jets of the range open.

The Fosters have no children, but Mrs. Foster wanted to give toys to several children of friends and relatives, the police learned. Foster, a buyer for a Pittsburgh and New York department store, moved here from Pittsburgh a year ago. Mrs. Foster was 43 years old.

Tom Taylor, acting postmaster here, that he will ask the senate committee on postoffices and post roads to reject Taylor's nomination as postmaster. Senator McKellar is ranking democratic member of the committee.

McKellar's letter was in reply to one written recently by Taylor denying that he had made or published remarks derogatory to the senator and requesting him to have his nomination confirmed.

In his letter, McKellar declared the acting postmaster had said in the newspapers that "you had caught me 'snooping around the federal building making trouble' as if it was a dishonorable thing for me to visit the postoffice building." He also wrote that "in another publication you stated that I was 'meddling' in republican affairs that did not concern me and that you, as acting postmaster, would not stand for it."

Lyons, 71-year-old newspaper publisher of Abingdon, Va., was bound over to the next session of the Washington county grand jury by Mayor E. H. Crabtree late yesterday afternoon. Lyon's bond was fixed at $10,000, which he furnished.

Lyon was arrested last Saturday on a warrant sworn out by Joe Dinkens and was placed under bond of $5,000 pending a preliminary hearing.

It is charged that the alleged assault took place in the publishing house at Abingdon early last week, but was not reported until later in the week when officers allege that the girl told her mother. Lyon has lived in Abingdon for about 20 years and is widely known throughout this section.

St. Louis, December 10.—(AP)—A coroner's jury today held Edward J. Hennesy, manager of the Hotel Buckingham Annex, on a charge of criminal carelessness for the fire which destroyed one section of the hotel last Monday with loss of seven lives.

The jury charged "gross neglect in delaying the calling of the fire department when the fire was discovered" and "gross neglect in not providing proper and safe methods of escape during an emergency fire."

Circuit Attorney Sidener announced the case would be presented to the grand jury. Hennesy was released on $5,000 bond.

RAILROAD BUSINESS IN MACON DISTRICT IMPROVES RAPIDLY

Macon, Ga., December 10.—(Special.)—Business conditions have been improving so rapidly on the railroads in this territory that all of the shops are now running with normal forces and on normal time.

Peculiar weather conditions of the early spring and early summer together with the drouth, caused a lull in railroad business and for a time several of the railroad shops were working on short time.

The Central of Georgia railway employs more than 1,000 men in its local shops and the Southern railway employs about 400 men.

Emory To Stage Mock Assembly Of World League

Emory University, Ga., December 10.—(Special)—Emory university will hold a citizenship conference and a model assembly of the League of Nations in February. The International Relations club and the Political Science club will unite in holding a three-day conference for the purpose of consideration of the political situation, and in order to show the inner workings of the League of Nations.

The conference will be promoted by funds from the Carnegie endowment for international peace and other national organizations for endeavors of this kind. It will bring delegaets from most of the southern colleges and universities.

The conference committee proposes to bring many speakers of international note on the various phases of politics as they concern the average man. The international relations part will bring men that deal with the workings of the league.

The model assembly, which will be put on by members of the International Relations club during the conference, will illustrate the actual working of the league at Geneva. Parts of representatives of the 44 nations in the league will be taken by individual students, and actual problems will be taken up and discussed. Students from 11 foreign nations who are enrolled at Emory will represent their native lands in the assembly. It is being directed by Dr. R. H. McLean, professor of history.

The conference is being arranged to overlap with the conference of the Southern Association of Economists, which meets in February, in order that delegates for the economics conference may remain over for the subsequent conferences.

LAKE RATE HEARINGS ENDED BEFORE I. C. C.

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Protracted hearings before the interstate commerce commission on the proposal of southern railroads to cut lake cargo coal rates were wound up today, representatives of coal operators in West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee being the last witnesses to be heard.

James D. Francis, vice president of the Island Creek Coal company and chairman of the general committee of southern coal operators, seeking the rate reduction, testified as an expert that southern coal mines had no abnormal advantage from the operating standpoint over their northern competitors. C. C. Dickinson, head of another large coal-producing enterprise in West Virginia, supported his testimony, declaring that from the producing standpoint, southern and northern mines could be considered as occupying the same general basis.

The conclusion drawn by both witnesses was that the southern mines were consequently entitled to the same railroad rate treatment accorded northern mines.

Jail, Congested, Refuses To Take Americus Man

Americus, Ga., December 10.—(Special.)—Although convicted of making and selling intoxicants and sentenced to serve 12 months in the state penitentiary, C. E. Underwood, Americus man, has just been refused admittance to the state farm at Milledgeville.

Underwood, formerly a prosperous Americus business man, but now broken in health and reported penniless, is seriously ill at his home here. Recently, when his conviction was affirmed by the state court of appeals, Underwood surrendered himself to Sheriff W. P. McArthur and is now in charge of that officer. Because of his illness, however, prison officials at Milledgeville have declined to receive him.

Chairman Davidson, of the state prison commission, has notified W. T. Lane, counsel for Underwood, that conditions at the prison farm are now greatly congested, with inmates there sleeping on the floor and on improvised cots. Because of this condition no more prisoners will be received at the Milledgeville prison until some of those now confined there have served their sentences and have been released, and Underwood is too ill to be confined elsewhere.

Great sympathy has been aroused here for Underwood, and many persons have interested themselves in an effort to secure for him permission to serve the sentence imposed upon him under parole as it is expected his life will be greatly shortened by actual confinement in the penitentiary.

WIDOW AND BEACH GIVEN 10 YEARS

Mays Landing, N. J., December 10.—(AP)—Mrs. Margaret Lilliendahl and Willis Beach, convicted of killing the woman's aged husband, were sentenced today to ten years in state prison by a judge who believed they should have been given either the death penalty or at least life imprisonment.

"Beyond question," Justice Campbell said, when the prisoners were arraigned before him for sentence, "this crime was murder in the first degree. But since some of the jurors would not agree to such a verdict and as the compromise verdict of voluntary manslaughter was finally rendered, I will impose the maximum sentence possible."

The greatest penalty possible for a manslaughter verdict is 10 years' imprisonment "at hard labor or otherwise," and a fine of $1,000. Justice Campbell did not impose the fine, but he did stipulate that the sentences should be served at hard labor.

Beach, who is 58 years old, heard the verdict without a quiver of his pallid face, but the 42-year-old widow fell forward on the counsel table and sobbed convulsively. As they were led back to their cells the woman was moaning "Oh, I don't want to, I don't want to," and Beach's face was set in the twisted sneer that characterized him throughout the trial.

Defense counsel had announced before sentence today they would move for a new trial on the basis of evidence involving two negroes which they said developed after the case had gone to the jury.

This action failed to materialize, however, Mrs. Lilliendahl's lawyer telling the court that the new evidence was not yet ready for presentation.

Justice Campbell ordered that when such an application was ready it be presented to him and said that he would be here to consider it a month from today.

Before that time the prisoners will have begun their terms in the state prison at Trenton, although it was indicated today they may remain here over Christmas.

C. & O. MAY BECOME MAIN RAIL LINE OF NEW SYSTEM

Richmond, Va., December 10.—(AP) Chesapeake & Ohio eventually may become the central line of a great new railroad system, including the Erie and Pere Marquette lines, if the interstate commerce commission approves.

Plans already made looking to that end have not been sanctioned, but the commission explained its opposition was based less upon the physical aspects than upon the financial, which provided for issuance of nearly $60,000,000 in common stock to acquire control of the other roads. The proposed system would have more than 7,000 miles of road, with Chicago as a focal point and New York and Norfolk as seaboard ends of the main line tracks.

Earnings of the Chesapeake & Ohio have doubled in a decade, reaching a peak last year, but officials have forecast a lower net yearly until 1930. More than four-fifths of the freight traffic originates on the company's lines, about 85 per cent being bituminous coal.

News, Views And Reviews

Stock Letters.

FENNER & BEANE.

We interpret the St. Louis and O'Fallon decision as not being bearish on the railroad stocks, because it really has no fundamental significance. There is no question of confiscation in this case. That will not come up until the I. C. C. tries to fix freight rates on the basis of its valuation of the St. Louis & O'Fallon railroad. Then if the valuation is too low, the freight rate fixed on that valuation will also be too low and a clear-cut case of confiscation can then be made out.

This present decision has nothing to do with the fixing of freight rates, and for that reason is not important except as it marks one step forward in determining the real valuation of the railroads.

For a short time today the stock market seemed to take this decision seriously and the rally was brought to an abrupt halt at the end of the first hour. But after Wall street had had a chance to think it over, the impression that something new and disastrous to the rails had happened passed off. As a general proposition we remain skeptical of the market as a whole and when buying would pick and choose with great care because this rally has been due chiefly to short covering and when that buying has spent its force prices likely will again drift lower.

MARSHALL ELLIS, MACON, NEW HEAD OF REALTY BODY

Savannah, Ga., December 10.—(AP) Marshall J. Ellis, of Macon, was elected president of the Georgia Real Estate association at the closing session of the annual convention held at the Hotel DeSoto this morning. Mr. Ellis succeeds R. L. Cooper, who has held the position for a year and a half.

Other elections were W. G. Morton, Columbus, vice president; I. L. Domingues, Macon, secretary, and Washington Dessau, Macon, treasurer. C. J. Hunter, of Savannah, was elected a member of the board of directors to succeed G. A. Mercer, and L. D. Hill, of Columbus, was elected to succeed W. G. Morton, also of that place.

The 1928 meeting will be held at Athens.

MASTER'S DEGREES CONFERRED ON SIX CARROLLTON MEN

Carrollton, Ga., December 10.—(Special.)—Brought to Carrollton under the auspices of Carroll lodge No. 69, a Masonic degree team from Oglethorpe lodge No. 655, of Atlanta, came here Friday and conferred the master's degree upon six candidates. The Atlanta team consisted of about 30 workers of the lodge, including the following officers: J. Ben Daniels, worshipful master; J. H. Howard, senior warden; J. H. Johnson, junior warden; J. H. Liddell, senior deacon; W. A. Florence, junior deacon; F. L. Huff, senior steward, and W. L. Alden, junior steward.

Following a banquet at which 100 covers were laid the impressive ceremonies were held in the local Masonic hall.

Past Grand Master J. D. Hamrick, of Carrollton, was present, but Grand Master Raymund Daniel, of Atlanta, present incumbent, was unable to attend.

WOULD TRANSFER NATIONAL PARKS TO NEW CONTROL

Transfer of national parks and monuments from under the jurisdiction of the war department to the interior department is being agitated in government circles, according to messages received at fourth corps area headquarters Saturday. Dwight F. Davis, secretary of war, has indicated his willingness to join in a recommendation to congress that the administration of historical parks and monuments, with the exception of those situated overseas and those located on active military reservations, be transferred to the department of the interior, according to dispatches received here.

Among southern parks and monuments that will be affected by the change are the Chickamauga and Chattanooga military parks, Georgia and Tennessee, with an area of 5,733 acres, and Fort Pulaski, in Georgia.

THREE MERCER U. MEN CONSIDERED FOR SCHOLARSHIP

Macon, Ga., December 10.—(Special.)—Tob Cobb, Tifton; Fred Salter, Sandersville, and H. B. Fant, of this city, are three Mercer students whose names were presented today, with eight other southern men, to the Georgia Rhodes scholarship committee, which met this morning in Atlanta.

The meeting was held in the law offices of Austin, Austin, Foster & Moise.

STOCK OPINIONS.

Fenner & Beane—Short covering was chiefly responsible for the week-end rally in the stock market and when this buying has spent its force prices likely will again drift lower.

Prince & Whitely—Advise buying only on reactions and selling when there are substantial rallies.

Sutro Bros. & Co.—Think the prime investment stocks should go further.

F. B. Keech & Co.—Would not allow too much confidence to be engendered as the result of the advance.

NEW YORK EVENING SUN.

This was one of the most eventful Saturdays the financial district has experienced in many weeks. The stock market was churning at great speed, the federal court decision in the St. Louis & O'Fallon valuation case upholding the interstate commerce commission contention was announced, further gold shipments were made, three European currencies sold at new highs, and a stock exchange seat sale at a record price of $310,000 was announced.

In denying the St. Louis & O'Fallon an injunction to prevent the I. C. C. from collecting what it declared to be excess income, the court found that the commission has exercised its best judgment in determining a "short-cut" valuation, since it is practically impossible to be exact in such complex problems. The decision was unexpected, but unless the case is shunted aside by legal technicalities, there is reason to hope for a comprehensive ruling when it reaches the supreme court.

Today's decision had only a sentimental significance in the prospects of railroad securities. High-priced rails sold off about two points on the news and their heaviness halted an advance which had been going on throughout the entire list during the first hour. Nearly everything slipped back a little with the rails, but closing prices compared well with yesterday's finals.

WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Rise in Warner Quinlan has been accompanied by reports that new banking interests have bought a substantial interest in the company and will be represented on the board in the near future. Company is a complete oil unit and retails gasoline through a number of stations in the New York vicinity through its subsidiary, Mileage Gas company. Earnings for 1927 are expected to be better than $3 a common share. It pays $2 year dividend rate.

A seven-day wonder in Wall street has been the way General Motors stops going down when it nears 125. This resistance has given the bears a new idea of how a stock can be supported when its sponsors are really in earnest. Many authorities feel that General Motors is being accumulated for an early forward movement.

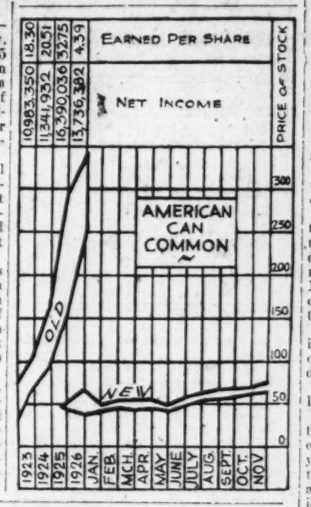

American Can Assets Large; Financial Condition Is Strong

Jersey City, N. J., December 10.—(AP)—The American Can company, formed from the consolidation of 65 manufacturers and having plants in 45 cities of the United States, Canada and Hawaii, is the leading producer of containers for food and chemical products, doing a business by volume four times as large as the nearest competitor.

The company has had substantial net earnings since its organization, although dividends on common were not begun until 1923. Last year the common stock's par value was changed from $100 to $25 and a 50 per cent stock dividend was declared.

The company's financial position is strong, net assets being reported as in excess of $40,000,000, with more than $10,000,000 in cash. The value of plants and real estate has grown from $77,000,000 to $110,000,000. The book value of $25 par common stock now is more than $40 a share.

Although earnings fell off last year, due largely to lower prices, it is estimated earnings this year will equal those of 1926 despite a heavy carryover and reduced demand. The company spent nearly $10,000,000 for construction last year and additional construction work now is under way.

MACON MAN HEADS GEORGIA REALTORS

Savannah, Ga., December 10.—(AP)—Marshall J. Ellis, of Macon, was elected president of the Georgia Real Estate association at the concluding business session today of the seventh annual convention held here in the DeSoto hotel. Athens was chosen as the 1928 convention city.

W. G. Morton, of Columbus, was elected vice president; I. L. Domingoes, of Macon, secretary, and Washington Dessau, of Macon, treasurer. C. J. Hunter, of Savannah, and L. D. Hill, of Columbus, were elected directors to succeed G. A. Mercer, of Savannah, and W. G. Morton, of Columbus.

A resolution advocating a new state taxation system on the grounds that the present system is "antiquated, obsolete, inequitable and unfair to a large number of taxpayers," was reported unfavorably by the resolution committee because it was "too broad and drastic in its present form." The committee felt "that the whole matter should be referred back to the directors to be carefully looked into by a special committee of experts in tax matters."

Resolutions adopted by the convention included one on good roads, and others expressing sympathy for Ward Wight, of Atlanta, a director, and Arthur S. Harris, of Savannah, secretary, who were unable to attend the convention on account of illness.

C. C. RAWLINS, 67, GRAYSON CITIZEN, DIES AFTER STROKE

Lawrenceville, Ga., December 10.—(Special.)—C. C. Rawlins, 67, living near Grayson, one of the most prominent citizens of this section, died early this morning from a stroke of paralysis. He was stricken at the breakfast table last Tuesday and never rallied. Mr. Rawlins was widely known in business and political circles.

He is survived by three sons, Henry, Clifford and Samuel Rawlins, all of Atlanta, and three daughters, Mrs. Newt McConnell and Mrs. Carl Rogers, Grayson, and Mrs. Andrew McConnell, of Stone Mountain.

Funeral and interment will take place at Chestnut Grove Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The Rev. B. F. Anderson, pastor of the Lawrenceville Presbyterian church, will officiate.

M'DONOUGH WOMAN IS REELECTED HEAD OF DISTRICT P.-T. A.

Macon, Ga., December 10.—(AP)—Mrs. R. H. Hankinson, of McDonough, Ga., was reelected president of the Sixth District Parent-Teacher association at the annual conference here today.

Mrs. E. S. Wright, of Roberta, was the only new officer elected, all the other officers being retained for another year.

Mrs. Hankinson reported that the 62 associations in the sixth district had been making a perfect record.

Mrs. P. H. Hanahan, of Atlanta, chairman of spiritual training and organization of church P.-T. A., pleaded for the organizaton of associations in churches and urged the parents to divide their time between the school P.-T. A. and the church.

BYRON'S LAST WILL BOUGHT BY AMERICAN

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

New York, December 10.—The last will and testament of Lord Byron is being fitted for a leather jacket today by a bookbinder for Himebaugh and Browne, Inc., stationers. The will is being fixed up for a new journey to a strange strong box.

Acquired recently by the stationers, the poet's will has been sold to an American collector. The name of the collector was not divulged. Neither was the price he paid for it. However, it cost the stationers about $10,000.

On one of the document's nine pages appears Byron's famous "desire that my body may be buried in the vault of the garden at Newstead without any ceremony or burial service whatever and that no inscriptions save my name and age be written on the tomb or tablet. And it is my will that my faithful dog may not be removed from the said vault; to performance of this, my particular desire, I rely on the attention of the administrators, hereinafter named."

MERCHANT MARINE BILL PRESENTED IN HOUSE

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—A comprehensive plan for putting the American merchant marine on a permanent private operation basis was presented to congress today in bill by Chairman Wood, of the house appropriations sub-committee, that passes upon funds for the shipping board.

The measure, which was drafted after consultation with a number of ship operators, has a double barrelled purpose—the building up of a large peace-time merchant fleet which in time of war will be a valuable adjunct to the navy.

Declaring that the bill "contains no radical suggestions and in the main does three things," the Indiana representative outlined them as follows:

Retirement of all vessels; removal from the commercial registry of all ships unnecesssary for maintenance of lines and, for national defense purposes, retention of these in the public service of a non-merchant class. Any such slow freight vessels might be of inestimable value in time of war and should be preserved as long as possible.

SUNDAY SESSION OF COURT HELD TO TRY NEGRO

Goldsboro, N. C., December 10.—(AP)—A Sunday session of Wayne county superior court, beginning at 9:30 a. m., tomorrow, tonight was expected to conclude the case against Larry Newsome, 32, negro charged with having murdered Beula Tedder, 15, near her home in Great Swamp township Thursday night.

The negro was brought from state prison today where he had been taken for safe keeping. He was arraigned for trial and the case started this afternoon.

Villa Rica Farmers Win Prizes Offered By Sears, Roebuck Co.

Villa Rica, Ga., December 10.—(Special.)—Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Bagwell and family, of Villa Rica, Ga., submitted one of the three largest sweet potatoes received in a corn-potato contest conducted by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural foundation, according to official announcement by the foundation today. The potato won a prize over a large number entered by contestants in all sections of the southeast.

Felix Williams, also of Villa Rica, was awarded a prize for the long ear of corn he sent to the agricultural foundation. The ear submitted by Mr. Williams measured between 11 and 12 inches in length and was a winner in competition from all over the southeast.

WARNING SOUNDED ON OIL WASTE

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Opening the session of the newly-formed legislative committee of the federal oil conservation board today, Secretary Work pictured an "urgent need for more whole-hearted cooperation" by oil company executives actuated by a more thorough realization of the common interest in conservation of petroleum resources.

The committee composed of nine members, three from the government, three from the oil industry and three from the American Bar association, assembled at the suggestion of Secretary Work. That such a committee was needed to study possible legislation for conservation of petroleum and elimination of production waste was unquestioned, he declared.

The unprecedented flood of oil during the past year cannot be construed as a forecast of continued plenty, the secretary said, but rather, and very properly, should be viewed as an unnecessary draft on the nation's reserve.

Speaking for the federal oil reservation board, of which he is chairman, the secretary expressed hope that the committee would determine upon a constructive program in the interest of practical conservation of the country's resources.

The federal board considers the better correlation of underground rights and the relief of competitive pressure as the principal factor in actual conservation, said the secretary, adding:

"If you can devise a substitute for the present legal procedure, which now expresses the primitive instincts of the chase, something that is more in keeping with present-day engineering and economic knowledge and the national responsibility of our future, then you will have performed a task of constructive statesmanship."

Secretaries Wilbur and Davis urged the committee to take some definite action to curb present waste in the production of oil, as both the army and navy depend largely on petroleum. Not only national defense, they declared, but the entire life of the nation is affected.

Secretary Hoover said that he was interested intensely in the work of the committee as commerce had come to depend on oil transportation.

Secretary Work urged that comprehensive action be taken.

"More wholehearted cooperation of the oil industry is needed," he asserted. "The over-production of the past year is a danger signal to the country that our resources are being wasted and something must be done. Whether it be by legislation or by other means this committee should determine."

STOCK EXCHANGE SEAT IS SOLD AT NEW RECORD

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

New York, December 10.—Another new high record was established in the price of a New York stock exchange membership today when arrangements were completed for a sale at $[illegible],000. The price was $5,000 higher than the last sale, which was the previous high point.

Not so long ago few traders expected the price to touch $300,000 by the end of the year. With that mark reached and passed, speculation is current on the figure which will be attained before January 1. At the $310,000 rates the paper value of the 1,100 exchange seats is $341,000,000. It is the custom of the stock exchange not to announce the names of buyers and sellers until the transfer is formally approved.

WEATHER TO RULE ON SHIP TAKING COOLIDGE TO CUBA

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—If the weather is good, President Coolidge, on his trip next month to Cuba to attend the Pan-American congress, will travel from Key West to Havana and back on the battleship Texas. Otherwise, a cruiser will be placed at his disposal.

Secretary Wilbur announced today that, barring bad weather, the Texas would await the presidential party at Key West. It cannot enter the harbor there, however, so if it is raining a cruiser, drawing less water, will be used, making a transfer from a launch unnecessary. One of the light cruisers of the scouting fleet would be available.

Wilbur said he proposed to accompany the President. Secretary Kellogg also plans to be a member of the party, which probably will include several of the American delegates to the congress.

HOUSE MEMBER, SIX FEET TWO, IS VICTIM OF JOKE

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Representative McClintic, democrat, Oklahoma, looked over the house membership today from the vantage point afforded by his 6 feet 2 inches to see who had played a joke on him.

A bill offered yesterday authorized the secretary of the navy to purchase Rolls-Royce automobiles for each officer in the navy. It was purported to have been introduced by McClintic, but the Oklahoma member disclaimed any knowledge or responsibility for it.

The measure was withdrawn by unanimous consent, but not before McClintic had remarked that naval officers should devote their navigation to ships, not automobiles. Representative Blanton, democrat, Texas, declared the procedure was a serious matter which should be investigated.

Legal Slaying Of Adulterous Women Considered

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Cairo, Egypt, December 10.—A husband, father, brother, son or male cousin may slay a woman he catches in an act of adultery and he may also slay the paramour with no fear of punishment, if a bill now in the chamber of deputies becomes law. The chamber's judicial commission has already recommended its enactment, subject to slight modifications.

This recommendation normally would practically insure the passage of the bill, which comes up in the chamber for final reading Monday evening. However, the bill has aroused a tremendous outcry in the local press as well as among Egyptian women's organizations, and it is possible the measure will be shelved.

Foreigners view with apprehension the passage of the law, which would mean that the murder of a foreigner discovered with an Egyptian woman would not be punished.

It also is pointed out that the measure might lead to grave abuses and unparalleled family feuds and slayings.

Folsom & Rood Personnel

W. J. Folsom, former president and active head of the Folsom Realty and Insurance company, and A. E. Rood, also formerly affiliated with Mr. Folsom in the business opportunities field, have established offices in the Healey building to conduct a general real estate and business brokerage business, specializing in hotel and theater properties. The new partnership will be known as Folsom and Rood and have connected with it H. A. Klotz, in charge of the rental department. Mr. Klotz has also been associated with Mr. Folsom for some time.

Mr. Folsom is recognized as one of the most experienced business brokerage men in Atlanta. He has been in this field for more than three years, specializing during this period in the sale of hotel businesses. His experience in the hotel field covers a period of 20 years, of which 17 years were spent in direct contact with hotel management. For seven years he had charge of Hotel Hampton, Hampton Springs, Fla. This wealth of experience and Mr. Folsom's past record in the general business brokerage business is regarded by members of the new concern as one of its chief assets and assurances of service to clients.

Mr. Rood, the second member of the newly organized firm, has been an executive in the railroad, lumber and other large business fields for many years. He came to Atlanta from Macon, Ga., where he conducted the A. E. Rood Lumber company, to engage in the business opportunity field. He now plans to close out his Macon interests and move his family to this city. Mr. Rood will specialize in the sale of theater business.

Mr. Klotz is well known among the younger business men of Atlanta and is a native of this city. Like Mr. Folsom and Mr. Rood, he was recently identified with the Folsom Realty and Insurance company, and is thoroughly experienced in the work undertaken.

He will specialize in commercial leases as well as business opportunities.

A feature pointed to by Mr. Folsom in establishing the new firm is that it is not a new venture, but the grouping together of experienced men into one organization. A sidelight on the rapid growth of Atlanta revealed by the business, Mr. Folsom remarked, is the large number of out-of-town people attracted to this city in order to enter business here. Activities of Folsom and Rood will be extended over the entire group of southern states, it was announced.

BOARD TO ELECT 1928 OFFICERS

Final plans have been formulated for the annual business meeting of the Atlanta Real Estate board to be held at the Atlanta Athletic club at 6 o'clock Thursday night, December 15, according to announcement by Dana Belser, president.

At the annual meeting 22 committee reports covering all of the activities and work of the Atlanta Real Estate board will be submitted to the membership as a whole for their approval.

Officers of the board for the year 1928 will be elected. The officers to be named will be president, first vice president, second vice president, treasurer and secretary.

President Belser urges all members of the board to make their plans now to attend the meeting on Thursday night, as it is important that each member be there to hear the reports of the different committees and become familiar with the work that the organization carried on during the year in the interest of their business.

All members of the Real Estate board will be sent detailed notices of the annual meeting and reservation cards will be inclosed in each letter. President Belser states that each member is requested to fill in the reservation card and return it to the office of the board at the earliest possible date so that ample provision can be made for all attending.

ADAMS-CATES CO. CLOSES BIG LEASE

Lease of the commercial building at 448 Means street, N. W., to the High Point Bedding and Chair company at an aggregate rental of $75,000 was announced Saturday by Adams-Cates company, agents in the transaction. The lease was made for the Golden Eagle Buggy company and was one of the largest leases closed during the week which followed a period of record activity in Atlanta real estate.

The lessees, formerly located at 537 White street, moved into the Means street building to obtain larger quarters, it was said. The structure contains approximately 40,000 square feet, with space for furniture manufacturing, salesrooms, offices and storeroom.

Consummated in the twelfth month of the year, the lease adds another substantial sum to the great volume of business handled this year by Adams-Cates company, which probably will establish one of the record real estate business periods in this section. Some of the largest deals of the season have been handled through the Adams-Cates office.

Architect's Drawing of $75,000 Plant, First in South With Gillespie System

Huge general automobile service station under construction on the southeast corner of Ponce de Leon avenue and Juniper street, to cost $75,000 at conservative estimate. The plant is the first to be built by the Gillespie Auto Laundry System, Inc., outside of the Pacific coast plants. The architecture is old Georgian by Raymond C. Snow, Atlanta architect.

A new type of architecture, involving construction costing many millions of dollars for building automobile service stations on a grand scale in principal cities of America, seems destined to be inaugurated in Atlanta as a result of the huge Gillespie auto system plant now being erected on the northeast corner of Ponce de Leon avenue and Juniper street, adjacent to the Ponce de Leon apartments.

This development became apparent when it was learned from B. K. Gillespie, following recent announcement of the $2,000,000 lease for 99 years on the corner, made for the Gillespie corporation through Edgar H. Sims and O. D. Bartlett, of the Haas & Howell real estate department, that the Atlanta plant, the eighth to be built incorporating the Gillespie system, but the first of its kind east of the Rocky mountains, would be worked out by Raymond C. Snow, prominent Atlanta architect, along old Georgian lines in an attempt to find an architectural type applicable to the 200 plants to be built in other large cities.

Mr. Gillespie, who is vice president of the concern and inventor and patentee of the car washing system that makes it possible to completely wash a car in 15 minutes at the same time eliminating the element of delay in waiting, by washing an average of 60 cars an hour, is to remain in Atlanta throughout the period of construction.

Heretofore, all plants operating under the Gillespie system were confined to the Pacific coast region and their architectural style to the customary Spanish type. A more adaptable type of architecture has been sought since the scope of the service company became national and the decision was reached to build 200 plants in America. In this respect the Atlanta plant is to serve as an example for the vast amount of construction planned, Mr. Gillespie said.

Final draft of the plans for the $75,000 plant to be constructed here is now being made by Raymond C. Snow. Mr. Snow's creation is a cross between the English and old colonial types of architecture, and is known as old Georgian. It was originated in this section. So far it seems especially satisfactory, Mr. Gillespie asserted, because it can be standardized to be used in all sections, and at the same time provides structural beauty, with appearance of dignity and complete elimination of freakishness.

As soon as final plans and specifications are ready, which is anticipated for the middle or close of this week, bids for letting the building contract will be accepted from local contractors. In this respect, Mr. Gillespie pointed out, all expenditures are to be made locally when possible. To avoid all delays in a prompt start on the new undertaking, excavation work has been pushed during the past week and the old residential structures torn down and removed.

The main building will be elbow-shaped, situated along west and south sides of the lot, bordered on both sides by alleys and extending in length more than 200 feet on the west and 200 feet on the south. Proceeding from the front end on Ponce de Leon avenue, around the building, special sections for the following services and conveniences will be constructed in the edifice: Restaurant, measuring 25 by 100 feet, with the front portion for patrons, the rear portion for employees and a kitchen between; tire and battery service section; brake-testing and relining equipment; the main auto laundry section on the southwest corner, containing the novel circular moving platform with space for 15 to 18 cars; this section will also have five lubricating racks equipped with three of the latest type high-pressure alemiting machines; east of this will be the motor and chassis cleaning department; fender and body repair department; valve grinding and shock absorber service; front wheel aligning division; polishing department, and clothes cleaning and pressing service for patrons.

In a separate building on the northeast corner of the large lot will be the gasoline and service station, including the office, cigar and news stand and barber shop. There will be numerous rest rooms at various locations on the site and the entire plant will be wired for radio and panatrope, which are to be operated from the main office.

Realtors Plan Invading Mexico On Pleasure Trip

A tour of Mexico, land of pre-Aztec ruins just beginning to be deciphered and of modern industries just awakening, has been arranged to follow the annual business meeting of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, to be held in Houston, Texas, January 25-27. The tour will be conducted by the Houston real estate board.

President Calles will receive the party at Mexico City.

A one-day automobile tour of the cities of the Rio Grande valley will be made en route to Mexico City. The party will go by automobile from Mission to Brownsville through McAllen, Pharr, San Juan, Edinburg, Alamo Donna, Weslaco, Mercedes, LeFeria, Harlingen and San Benito.

There will be a half-day stop at Corpus Christi, Texas, en route to Mission and the border.

T. L. Evans, manager of the domestic and foreign trade extension department of the Houston Chamber of Commerce, will personally conduct the party in its visit to the land of ancient temples and opal mines, of frijoles prepared on charcoal braziers, of multeers wrapped in brilliant zarapes, and of languid senoritas on discreet balconies with a moonlight language of the fan, a land where the American traveler needs no passport, and where he tips his cargador in amount as he would his hometown red-cap, but in a coinage which has an exchange rate of something like two dollars for his one.

Mr. Evans, whose large acquaintance in the Mexican republic will be drawn on to make the entertainment side of the tour varied and interesting, has conducted a number of similar parties on visits to the Mexican capital.

Applications for reservation for the Mexican trip should be made to R. C. Burrows, secretary of the Houston real estate board. A deposit of $50 is required.

Washington, December 10.—(AP)—Protests against the confirmation of Judge Hayes of the newly-created middle district of North Carolina have been filed with Senator Overman, democrat, North Carolina, who will have the senate judiciary committee make an inquiry.

Senator Overman has been asked by D. T. Vance, of Plumtree, N. C., to hear protests against Hayes, who was given a recess appointment last spring and whose nomination was sent to the senate by President Coolidge this week.

Vance has filed charges that Hayes has used his office to solicit trade for his law partner and that Hayes made false representations to the republican national committee.

It is emphasized that this is a trade agreement only, and does not involve a merger of joint capital and interest.

In a setting representing the white house lawn the Indiana Society of Chicago staged its 23d annual banquet and funfest, entertaining 600 Hoosiers and ex-Hoosiers, all of whom claimed to have been president, or at least vice president, of something, if only a mandolin club or debating society.

The Atlanta real estate board was well represented by a large delegation at the 1927 yearly meeting of the Georgia Real Estate association held in Savannah, Ga., Friday and Saturday, December 9-10, according to Dana Belser, president.

Two of the outstanding features were the banquet given Friday night at the DeSoto hotel and the realtors' ball given at the Hotel Oglethorpe on Saturday night.

H. H. Hallman, chairman of the convention attendance committee, of the Atlanta board, expressed gratification with the manner in which visiting members were entertained on this trip. From the registration at the convention, there were approximately 150 real estate men from the 12 boards in the state composing the state association.

Some of the outstanding speakers on the program were A. B. Cates, of Atlanta, who spoke on "Selling Business Property;" Dave Knight, of the Atlanta Georgian, who spoke on "Real Estate Advertising." Romantic Young Chinaman Back On Nation's Stage

Shanghai, October 10.—(AP)—Chiang Kai-shek, romantic young generalissimo of the nationalists before his resignation several months ago, is back on the Chinese stage again.

This time he appears in a civilian role as leader of the nationalist movement and not as "generalissimo," a title under which he swept from Canton northward to the Yangtze valley in 1926, bringing Hankow and Shanghai under the nationalist banner.

Today party leaders, faced with the task of healing the split in the nationalist ranks, so fatal to their drive on Pekin, agreed to have Chiang Kai-shek again assume active leadership of the movement. He was drafted unanimously by the leaders as the man around whom all the various factions could rally.

Chiang Kai-shek recently married Miss Meiling Soong.

Draper-Owens Co. Makes $145,000 November Leases

Leases consummated by the Draper-Owens company during the month of November, aggregating $145,000, were announced Saturday by Jerry Blount, manager of the Draper-Owens lease department. The list, covering a large variety of commercial fields and business locations, is significant in indicating the healthy condition of the local market, in addition to showing continued record activity on the part of the well-known brokerage.

Besides the pleasing real estate aspect disclosed by the large volume of leases for the 30-day period, the transactions throw an optimistic light on general business conditions in Atlanta. The demand for space by new concerns and old concerns seeking new quarters is looked upon by men in the real estate field as a favorable sign.

The Draper-Owens company transactions include leases to the following companies:

American Discount company, 203 Spring street; Atlantic & Pacific Tea company, 2921 Peachtree street; Carlton Shoe company, 185 Peachtree street; F. B. O. He asserted that the outlook for 1928 is extremely bright and that his firm is working on some leases which will inure to the benefit of Atlanta when consummated.

CHICAGO DECLARED NINETY PER CENT CHURCH MEMBERS

Chicago, December 10.—(AP)—Chicago, ridiculed by the righteous for its rackets and rascals, is 90 per cent religious, the Chicago church federation has found.

This ratio, nine church members to one having no denominational connection, is unsurpassed in any other city of a half million or more in the United States, the federation said in a survey report today.

"There are about 2,000 churches in the metropolitan area," said Walter R. Mee, secretary of the federation. "Protestants and Catholics are about equal in membership," continued Mee, "each having about 1,250,000 communicants. Those of Jewish membership approximate 400,000."

Vatican Picture Gallery To Get Special Building

Rome, December 10.—(AP)—Pope Pius XI has decided to remove the famous Vatican picture gallery founded more than 100 years ago by Pope Pius VII to a special building to be erected in the Vatican garden, The Associated Press learned today.

The new building, as the pope envisages it, will be modern in every aspect, bringing out the beauties of the great collection, and preserving it from deterioration. Better lighting facilities will enable art lovers from all over the world to admire the masterpieces for longer periods of time under greatly improved conditions.

The present Vatican rooms, chosen and adapted by Pius X for the collection, are on the ground floor of the wing of the apostolic palace that leads to the gardens. About 15 years use of these rooms has proved them to be damp, unsuitably lighted and insufficiently ventilated.

The Vatican collection contains Raphael's "Transfiguration," his last great work, and many other notable paintings by the same artist, also prized works by Leonardo Da Vinci, Fra Aneglico, Titian, Guercino, Domenichino, Guidoreni, Paul Veronese and others of the same calibre.

COAST GUARD BOAT ON WAY TO NORFOLK WITH ALIEN CARGO

Elizabeth City, N. C., December 10. (AP)—The United States coast guard supply boat AB-12 from the station here, carrying the stranded Norwegian freighter Cibao's crew, 11 of whom, it was said, were to be turned over to custom officials, left Hatteras inlet today for Norfolk. It was due there at 3 a. m. tomorrow.

The Cibao was driven on the Hatteras inlet bar Sunday by a storm that swept the North Carolina coast, and according to coast officials here, information that 11 of the crew of 24 were aliens from the West Indies led to orders that the men be taken to Norfolk. They will be turned over to divisional headquarters of the coast guard there, it was said, and later to the custom officials.

New York, December 10.—(AP)—The cotton market was quiet today and fluctuated within a range of 10 or 12 points recoveries from a small opening decline being followed by setbacks in late trading. After selling up from 19.01 to 19.09, March eased off to 19.01 again and closed at the price, the general market closing steady, at net declines of 6 to 10 points.

The opening was steady at a decline of 3 to 8 points in response to relatively easy Liverpool cables. There was some liquidation together with a little southern and local selling but offerings were light and prices soon steadied on indications that there were trade buying orders in the market for execution around the 19-cent level for March.

This demand, with covering, caused rallies to about or a shade over yesterday's closing quotations, January selling up from 18.80 to 18.88 and May from 19.16 to 19.25. Trade buying, however, evidently failed to follow the advance, and as the demand tapered off, the market eased again, reaching the lowest prices in the late trading. January sold off to 19.77 and March to 19.16 and the close was within a point or two of the lowest.

Business was quiet during the session traders evidently being inclined to await further developments in the spot markets or the cotton goods situation. There was continued talk of domestic mill curtailment. Some traders expressed the opinion that recent low temperatures in the south might kill off some of the boll weevils. These factors, and the relatively easy showing of Liverpool, may have had an influence on the market, but they were offset to some extent, at least, by rumors that there were further trade buying orders in the market for execution on declines and reports that inquiries pointed to an improved business in goods.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 131,000 bales against 239,000 last year.

NEW ORLEANS PRICES DECLINE 10 POINTS.

New Orleans, December 10.—(AP)—The cotton market was barely steady today in rather quiet trading. After declining 10 points soon after the opening, January contracts rallied later on short covering and traded up to 19.00, unchanged compared with the previous close. The option closed at 18.95, net 5 points down. The general market closed steady at a net decline of 5 to 6 points.

Liverpool cables were lower than due at the start here and first trades showed losses of 6 to 8 points. The initial decline extended to 18.90 for January, 19.12 for March, and 19.23 for May, 9 to 10 points below the previous close.

Shorts covered rather freely for over the week-end and this developed a scarcity of contracts. The subsequent rally carried January back to 19.00, March 19.20 and May 19.31, unchanged to one point down from yesterday's finals.

The market fluctuated narrowly thereafter and closed steady, 5 to 6 points under the best.

Exports for the day totaled 2,525 bales.

Weekly Expert Review Of British Cotton Market

Manchester, Eng., November 30.—(By Mail.)—Business in the Manchester market during the past week has been helped by the greater steadiness in raw material prices. After a lengthy period of slack demand it is welcome to record an improvement in the amount of business offering, and many spinners and manufacturers have met with more success in booking orders than for some time back. The prices being secured are poor, but it may be taken for granted that immediately a little relief has been obtained a stiffer front will be presented to buyers.

The cloth market has presented a more cheerful appearance. Manufacturers have dealt with a larger inquiry and there has certainly been a bigger desire on the part of merchants to operate more freely. There has been more demand in a wide range of fabrics for India, and some substantial transactions have taken place, chiefly in light fabrics. As for China, manufacturers have had to be satisfied with only small orders. The auction sales, however, have been slightly better. White goods have been in fair request for the Straits settlements. Shippers to Egypt continue to display more interest and some useful lots have been booked. The undercurrent of demand in printing and finishing styles for west Africa, South America and the continent continues healthier. There has been no particular activity in the home trade section.

The inquiry in American yarns has been on broader lines, and sales have been rather more encouraging. Owing to the fierce competition between spinners, quotations in all quarters have been cut to secure contracts. Yarns made from Egyptian cotton have not been sold very freely, but the business done from day to day has been equal to the requirements of producers.

The whole outlook in the market is more cheerful than has been the case for a long time back, and it is pretty safe to predict that a larger business will be done during the next few months. There are no signs, however, of the demand broadening to such an extent that manufacturers will be able to work full time.

CURB ADVANCES ON BRISK BUYING

New York, December 10.—(By the Associated Press.)—As though to convey in a most convincing manner its ability to maintain present levels, numerous industrial issues opened on the curb exchange today with a vigorous buying movement which lifted quotations in active favorites 3 and more points and in some instances to new high figures for the year.

Prominent in this classification were Richmond Radiator, American Cyanamid and Sidney Blumenthal. The last named opened with a further gain of 4 7-8 at 36 7-8. United States Freight, U. S. L. Battery, Bancitaly Corporation and Borden's Company also were strong issues, with the latter also reaching a peak level on a gain of 8 points to 164.

Dealings in the last hour continued on a broad scale, reaching record volume for a half holiday session. There were several industrials offered at sharp concessions. Lehigh Valley Coal sales declined 9 1-2 points to a low mark at 62. Tubize Artificial Silk dropped 15 points and Rolls-Royce preferred yielded 2 points to a low at 45 and later rallied 5 points from that level. Ford Motor was neglected, selling at 617, a gain of 1 point. Peak quotations in the later trading were registered in General Fireproofing, General Bronze and Atlas Plywood on advances of about 2 points.

Public utility issues moved in a mixed manner. United Gas Improvement continued in demand, moving up 5-8 of a point to 115 1-2. American Gas rose 4 1-2 points and Middle West 3 1-2 points.

Galena Signal Oil common yielded a point to 5. Salt Creek Producers displayed early strength on a point gain, while others ranged within narrow limits. In the later operation Vacuum rose steadily about 3 points.

FOR SORE THROAT

"Listerine, Madam, Quickly!"

Do you remember when you played "sickness in the house"? Perhaps you were the worried little mother, or the confident doctor doing his best to save the "make-believe" patient.

And if you were the doctor, it was very likely that you prescribed Listerine, the safe antiseptic. For since 1879, Listerine has been accepted as a genuine first aid in the care of sore throat and colds.

It has checked millions of cold weather complaints before they had a chance to become serious.

At the first sign of throat irritation, gargle with it repeatedly. Use it full strength. If improvement is not soon apparent, consult your physician. Lambert Pharmacal Company, St. Louis, Mo., U. S. A.

THE NEXT TIME!

The next time you buy a dentifrice ask for Listerine Tooth Paste at 25¢ the large tube. It has halved the tooth paste bill of more than two million people.

ONE-WAY STREETS.

There is a phase of Atlanta's traffic problem which calls imperatively for solution—one which has large bearing upon the entire situation and which, properly solved, would do more to relieve the ever-increasing tangle into which the city streets are deteriorating.

There are many streets in the center of the city, not main arteries of traffic, but important tributaries, which should be made one-way streets at once. These streets, while important thoroughfares, are, most of them, narrow. To try and use them for two-way traffic is almost attempting a physical impossibility.

Many of these streets are but a little over sixteen feet in width, barely allowing space for two cars to pass. Yet automobiles are parked along them all. Usually the drivers see the impossibility of parking more than one car in one place and it is thus possible, by weaving in and out, for the passing driver to make his way—until he comes to the place where two cars are parked side by side, or until he meets a car going in opposite direction. Then a blockade of traffic immediately ensues and more delay, and more bent fenders result.

There would be no disadvantage to any business concern located on these narrower streets if they were made one-way traffic thoroughfares. Rather, it would be to the advantage of the occupants of the business buildings on these streets, because it is far better to reach an objective by going around one additional block than it is to find your access impeded and delayed for long periods of time, while parked cars are moved, while traffic tangles are unraveled.

Fortunately this situation does not, at this time, confront the main arteries of traffic in the business section of the city. These principal thoroughfares are, in practically every instance, wide enough to accomodate two-way travel.

But it is evident, even to the cursory observer, that we must make our narrower downtown streets one-way thoroughfares at once. It is the only possible solution to a tantalizing situation.

By taking this action, with its consequent speeding up on traffic on the narrower streets, the situation, even on the main streets, will be improved. Speeding of traffic in any portion of the city of necessity relieves the pressure in all other sections and, by making it possible for the through city traffic to use the one-way narrower thoroughfares, the main streets will find themselves better able to accomodate the vehicles which use them.

Other cities have adopted the one-way street idea, most of them many years ago. If New York, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans and practically every big city in the country have found this system satisfactory, a help to traffic and a benefit to business, there can be no reasonable objection to its adoption in Atlanta.

Make the subsidiary streets one-way thoroughfares, prohibit parking of automobiles on one side, at least, and more will have been done to relieve traffic congestion all over downtown Atlanta than could be accomplished by any other method.

As it is today the situation resolves itself, ultimately, into the simple choice of using these streets as streets—for which they were built—or closing them to traffic to all practical intents, and leaving them as free parking garages and private roadways.

THE MOBILE TERMINALS.

When in September, 1923, the state of Alabama passed an enabling act which authorized the expenditure of $10,000,000 in construction of great port terminals at Mobile, the authorities charged with administration of this fund made one decision which has had more to do with the successful prosecution of the undertaking than any other factor.

They called upon Major General William L. Sibert, U. S. army, retired, a distinguished son of Alabama, to undertake the project as chief engineer and general manager. At that time General Sibert was enjoying a well-earned rest on his farm in Kentucky, following his retirement from the army in 1920 at the end of 40 years of hard work, and with the distinction of being one of the world's greatest engineers.

General Sibert had been a member of the Isthmian canal commission, serving for seven years during the building of the Panama canal. He had direct charge of the work at the Carribean end of the canal, including the building of the Gatun locks and dam, the greatest engineering feat in the history of the world; excavation of the canal from Gatun to the Atlantic, and the building of the west breakwater in Colon bay.

During the world war General Sibert organized the chemical warfare service of the army.

A native of Alabama, General Sibert was induced to undertake the Mobile terminal project, after promises that the work would be kept entirely clear of politics and that he would be given an entirely free hand, which promise has been kept.

Today the port terminals at Mobile are nearing completion. They will give, not only to Alabama, but to the entire southeast, an immensely valuable outlet to the markets of the world, providing a perfect transfer point from rail to ocean transport for all manner of commodities. In addition to perfect facilities for transfer, vast storage warehouses have been provided.

A full description of the terminals, together with the purpose they will serve, written by General Sibert, is published in this issue of The Constitution. Also, in the rotogravure section, a most interesting page collection of photographs of the terminals as they appear today will be found.

The whole south owes a debt of gratitude to the genius of General Sibert, which made possible the rapid, scientifically perfect completion of a project which, in other hands and under other circumstances, might easily have degenerated into a pudding of political plums.

JAMES E. BROWN RETIRES.

After 51 years of service to his state and its people, there steps from the editorial sanctum, when the coming New Year dawns, one of the finest and ablest editors in the realm of Georgia journalism.

James E. Brown, for 41 years a newspaperman in Newnan, and for ten years before that editor of the Henry County Weekly, which he established, has announced his retirement from active work at the end of the present year. His passing marks the end of a career of remarkable value to the state as a whole, as well as to the communities which have been blessed with his citizenship.

Ever enthusiastic for the progress of his county and his state, ever unflinching in the defense of the right as he saw it, ever kindly and tolerant, even to those whose views he opposed, he can look back upon half a century of devoted labor with the knowledge that the admiration and love of his fellows will ever twine the laurels of sympathetic appreciation about his career.

In January, 1877, Mr. Brown established the Henry County Weekly. He moved to Newnan in 1886, assuming the editorial reins of the Coweta Advertiser in the fall of that year. One year later, when the Advertiser was merged with the Newnan Herald, he continued as editor. With the exception of a few months in 1912, when he took a much needed rest, Mr. Brown has thus continuously occupied the editorial chair for more than 50 years.

In 1884-5 he served the thirty-fourth senatorial district as state senator. For four years during the second Cleveland administration he was postmaster at Newnan and, under Governor Atkinson, was for four years state librarian.

The roster of Georgia weekly newspaper editors contains many names of men who have performed outstanding work for their communities. It is, almost without exception, a list of laborers who have given unselfishly, without thought of material reward, of their genius and their faith for the advancement of their people.

None of them, however, have worked harder nor more brilliantly than James Brown. His career has been one to adorn the profession of the journalist and to win the love of his fellows.

His retirement to a well-earned rest brings whole-hearted felicitations from a host of friends in all walks of life and the humble hope from younger men that they may be given the ability and opportunity to make of their lives as valuable contributions to the well-being of their generation as he did of his.

Retired to well-earned rest but, let us hope, not altogether separated from the gifted pen that has proven for so long both weapon and caress in his fingers.

THE ANNUAL HIGHWAY TEST.

For five months during which there has been practically no rain, Georgians have been regaled with voluminous ballyhoo about improvements in the condition of the state highways.

Now, as the rains return, to provide the test of the highways, Georgia once again finds herself mired to the hubcaps in mud and ruefully wondering what has become of all the highly-touted "developments," in twelve-month, permanent road construction.

When the Tech-Georgia football game attracted a greater pilgrimage of automobile travel to Atlanta than has ever been inspired by any one event in the past history of the state, the rains brought with them a fair test of Georgia's highways.

Automobiles by the hundred converged, on Saturday last, upon Atlanta from all sections of the state. They started for this city from Savannah, from Brunswick, from Augusta, from Albany, from Thomasville, from LaGrange, from Rome, from Chattanooga, from Athens and from practically every city, town and cross-roads in the state. Not all of them, by any means, completed their projected journey. By scores, yes, by hundreds, they ended their trips ditched beside the elongated quagmires that Georgia has been fatuous enough to call highways.

From LaGrange to Atlanta, or from Macon to Atlanta, true they drove in comfort over what are, to all intents, the only real automobile highways in the state. The only two continuous stretches of hard-surfaced road of length sufficient to dignify with the name of "highway."

But from Augusta and intervening points; from Chattanooga, Rome and all the roads to the northwest, from practically all other sections of the state, automobiles plowed through in mud, rolling into Atlanta mud-spattered and caked with Georgia clay, offering eloquent though mute evidence of the state's inadequate system of highway building.

All along the highway which parallels the Georgia railroad from Augusta to Atlanta, stalled cars were found mired deep in the ditch or hopelessly bogged in the middle of the road. Cars which succeeded in making the trip between the two cities did so only after a struggle lasting from nine to twelve hours, whereas the journey should be made in not over five hours at the maximum.

It is the same old story which is told in Georgia after every heavy rain. The same old bad advertisement for the state which every rainy-season tourist carries back to his home. The same old descent into the hell of mud after the false security of dry roads has again dangled its annual summertime mirage of self-delusion.

The same experience of checkerboard road making—one county paved and the next wallowing in mire. The same penalty for following after the deceptive hopes of a system unsound in its very inception.

Until Georgia abandons her foolish clinging to the county unit method of road building and gets busy as a state, in constructing through trunk highways, north and south, east and west, and diagonally, across her broad areas, so long will she remain the pitied and shamed unit in the sisterhood of states.

It is the system that is wrong, not any individual. It is the outworn clinging to an outgrown shibboleth that holds Georgia in muddy clasp while sister states drive cheerfully forward to the new day of ease and speed in transportation.

We must build trunk highways, paved for all-year comfort, for use in an age that no longer limits its travel horizon by the boundaries of a county.

JOHN G. KEALING.

Few men in the republican circles of the country were better known than John G. Kealing, national committeeman of his party from Indiana. He was an invincible factor not only in his state but throughout the middle west for many years, having at one time formed a close political triumvirate with former Governor James P. Goodrich and James A. Hemmenway. Upon the death of the latter it was left to Kealing to carry on, and he did so with great force and tact. He was the most consulted republican in America by the late President Harding and has been frequently consulted on party affairs and on middle western appointments by President Coolidge.

Mr. Kealing was well known in Georgia. When President Harding decided to establish a white party in the south, accepting Georgia for the experiment, he selected J. L. Philips, of Thomasville, a wealthy and leading citizen of the state, to undertake the job. He received his strongest support from John G. Kealing, of Indiana, who came to Atlanta and remained for several days on more than one occasion, afterward putting workers in the Georgia field to assist Mr. Philips. They were close personal and political friends to the day of Mr. Kealing's death.

In his political make-up the latter combined many of the elements of the late Mark Hanna.

FOREMOST FLOOD CONTROL.

That section of President Coolidge's annual message which relates to flood prevention in the valley of the mighty Mississippi river is specific and sensible. He sanely realizes that it is a serious condition and not an experimental theory that must be faced and remedied. Hence his definite recommendation that congress should give first and adequate protection to the lower valley, say from Cairo to the gulf.

It is true that many states occupy the vast region covered by the Mississippi and its thousand tributaries, and that in each of them are variable areas subject to the great floods that roll down from the upper reaches into the "father of waters."

It is natural, also, that the people who live in such jeopardy should press for protection to their lives and property and direct that pressure strongly upon their immediate representatives in congress.

The consequence is that all those congressmen are demanding that any measure for flood protection in the Mississippi valley shall be omnibus enough to meet the demands of their constituents. The gross measure of those demands is revealed in the proposal by Senator Hawes, of Missouri, to appropriate one billion of dollars to construct a comprehensive system of levees, spillways, dams and reservoirs to control and safely divert the flood visitations of the whole valley.

But the imperative need is for complete protection along the lower reaches of the great river, where the floods always break the inadequate levees, cover vast areas with appalling ruin, paralyze production and commerce, and take tolls of scores and hundreds of valuable human lives.

That annual menace is now recognized as a national peril and problem. Humanity, economy and nation-wide interests demand what the president wisely suggests, and that is the devotion of national efforts and funds to the flood control problem in the lower Mississippi, unhampered by the annexation of other and lesser problems. It is to be hoped strongly that congress will promptly accept and realize the conservative counsel of the president.

OPPORTUNITY AT ITS BEST.

No greater mistake can be made by youth upon the threshold of life than to heed the cry that opportunity was greater in the past than it is today. To the contrary, there never was a day when greater opportunity was offered to any intelligent, alert, hard-working young man or woman.

In the fall of 1920 there was a sudden period of business depression, due to deflation following the after-war expansion. At that time the cry went up on all sides that there was nothing new, no new doorway to success, that opportunity for the poor boy or girl was a thing of the fast-slipping past.

Less than twelve months later a new industry, a new business, sprang suddenly into vigorous life. Young men and young women seized the new opportunity and a whole crop of successful young manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers became established because of the development of radio.

A few years later, new opportunity again knocked at the door and a previously unknown young American quietly and efficiently accepted the challenge and the world added the name of Lindbergh to its list of heroes.

On every hand the chance for substantial success calls. Openings that to the uninitiate, perhaps, seem prosaic, call loudly for youth with its enthusiasm, its alert spirit, and its never-ceasing work.

In department store, in workshop, in professional office, in factory, construction camp and transportation field, money, respect, fame and success await all who have the ability and the character to seize their chance.

But, before all, youth should prepare properly for the future. For now, as always, opportunity calls loudest and offers the greatest rewards to the educated man or woman.

Education first, recognition of opportunity second, steady application and enthusiasm third, and triumphant success comes as the inevitable fourth.

The Lithuanian war machine is likely to run afoul and climb a Pole.

Money makes the Vare go and Vare sets a merry pace for the senate at the drop of the flag.

LOOKING AND LISTENING

BY SAM W. SMALL

A Son of the Sacred Cod Wants To Bite Big Holes in the Solid South.

Washington, December 10.—(Special.)—All the political freaks are not produced in Kansas and all the "four-flushers" do not come from Indiana. The old codfish commonwealth of Massachusetts has produced some rich and rare examples of both species, but none of them quite the equal of her "bearded Brownie" now in congress, who sports the tintinnabulating name of George Holden Tinkham.

Tinkham is a funny looking pilgrim. He wears a beard that makes him look like the twin brother of King Ben of the House of David. He would seem pompous if he were not so pot-bellied. He has the pluperfect Puritan complex, without any Puritan habits of asceticism or abstemiousness.

"Tink," as the press galleryites call him, is the sole survivor of the Blaine-Lodge south-baiters and therefore sole heir of the "bloody shirt" that long ago lost its sanguinary power to make the northern voter see red!

Tink Has Struck a Bobcat Trail.

He has come back to congress this session, hot on the trail of a bobcat, and fired his chase signal gun. He shot into the house hopper a resolution to institute an investigation "of the notorious and gross disfranchisement existing in the United States," due to the fact discovered by himself all alone that the southern states "have contemptuously ignored the fourteenth amendment."

Tink says that "honest and constitutional government in the United States does not exist today," and when one takes up with long handled tongs this last seven years' record of Tink's republican party, and reads it with a gas-mask on, one must absolutely agree with him!

Anyhow, as far as it was asked to consider that record, the republican loaded supreme court of the United States unanimously agrees with him.

Naturally, his charge that we haven't "honest" government was based on the sort given us by Albert Fall and Charlie Forbes, and a long list of others who are in the pen or under indictments that point that way.

We Are Incorrigible Insurrectos.

Now, just listen at Tinker! He says: "The insurrectionary slave states of the south, confidently relying, as they have always done, upon northern timidity, have contemptuously ignored this provision, with the result that these states now have more political power than they had before the civil war, when, for purposes of representation in the house of representatives and in the electoral college, they were allowed to count the white population plus three-fifths, or 60 per cent of the slave population. Today they count the white population and all the negroes, most of whom they disfranchise. In other words, they have annexed the entire political power of the negro, whereas before the civil war they only had three-fifths of it."

That is Tinker's indictment of the southern people, as fiercely made as it was by his forebears of a century ago.

The third apportionment of representatives was made upon the census of 1810 and the last was made upon the census of 1910.

In 1810 Massachusetts had no slaves. She had 693,039 whites and 7,706 free blacks, a total of 700,745. Divided by 35,000, the then basis of representation, she had 20 representatives in congress; but had her negroes been deducted, she would have had 19 only. So, in spite of the fact that she was a "free state" she had a congressman because of her negro inhabitants.

New York also, in that same year's census, acquired an extra congressman on account of her slave population. History, therefore, isn't "all bunk."

* * * *

Tink Will Not Travel Far.

It is not likely that Tink will travel far on the wheels in his resolution. There will be no "gas wave alarm" sounded throughout the south on account of its release in the air. And I hardly think it will make a great hit with his own party colleagues, in view of this paragraph in his argument:

"No reapportionment of the house of representatives has occurred since the 1910 census. The republican leaders of the house of representatives joining with the representatives from the insurrectionary slave states of the south are responsible."

Considering that Congressman Fred Gillett, of Massachusetts—Tink's own state—was speaker of the house from 1919 to 1925 and Nickie Longworth, of Ohio, has been speaker since Gillett was promoted into the senate in 1925, I am thinking Tink will find it hard to get them to swallow that rather bitter pill.

Tink wants to have his investigation of negro disfranchisements made before the census of 1930, so that, in an apportionment based upon it, the entire negro population of the south shall be eliminated from congressional representation.

His proposition is to nullify the fifteenth amendment so far as the southern negroes are concerned, confirm their alleged disfranchisement, and apply the fourteenth amendment by reducing southern representation to a white basis.

Tink Ignores Some Things.

No man was ever as wise as Tink looks, but there are some things he ignores, or doesn't know—most likely the latter.

For instance, he dodges clear around the statement by the supreme court in the Slaughter House cases of 1872, (16 Wall., 36), referring to the clause of the fourteenth amendment now appealed for by Tinkham, to-wit:

"We doubt very much whether any action of a state, not directed by way of discrimination against the negroes, as a class, will ever be held to come within the purview of this provision."

That is that, and Tink will have to come to taw and face that stone wall.

Once more, in the case of James vs. Bowman, in 1903, (190 U. S., 127), the supreme court said:

"Again, the amendment is not directed against action by individuals, but against action by the states or the United States. So an attempt by federal legislation to punish private persons who conspire to prevent negroes from voting is not within the power granted by the amendment."

And on the assumption that "power to enforce" gave congress power to legislate generally on the subject, the court said "the assumption is certainly unsound."

So Tink is going up against a big row of stumps and it will be fun to see him butting against them.

The south should worry about anything Tink, "son of the sacred cod," can say of or do to her!

Harris Concludes Tour.

Senator William J. Harris, Georgia's senior senator, has brought to a close one of the most remarkable speaking tours ever attempted by any public man in Georgia. He opened his speaking engagement April 1 and ended December 1, going into 125 counties, and addressing more people assembled at court sessions than any man in the history of the state.

The senator returned from Washington soon after the adjournment of congress in March, and met the people of Georgia in the various counties face to face, giving an account of his stewardship as a public servant and presenting clearly his record in the senate. He responded to many invitations at bridge openings, county fairs and civic clubs, discussing everywhere the paramount issues of the hour and defining his views on all public questions affecting our country.

He met with a most flattering reception everywhere, and just as he left for Washington he expressed his exceeding gratification at the wide measure of approval by the people of his course in congress.

NEW YORK SKYLINES

Manhattan's Christmas in Layers, Under, On and Above the Earth—Ten Million Persons Crowded Into One Shopping Center.

BY CHARLES ESTCOURT, JR.

(Copyright, 1927, in all countries by North American Newspaper Alliance.)

New York, December 10.—In middle Manhattan, accessible to millions only by most artificial means under, on and above the earth, Yuletide doings are now being concentrated, heaped up, piled up in layers, as in no other equal space on earth.

From now on the crush of people passing through, under and over the metropolitan center between Madison Square and Central Park will grow until, on the day before Christmas, it reaches perhaps 10,000,000.

An uncountable number will descend stairways to push themselves and their packages into trains already packed with office workers passing under the city's center but not coming up for air.

On the street level the Santa Claus shoppers will be so thick that they may well wish for a magic sleigh and the power to skim the housetops. Even the bundle bearers in elevators will be as cramped as if they were coming down chimneys.

Activities will vary from packing in sub-cellars to the tieing of mistletoe onto a chandelier over the atenographer's head, in an office in the twentieth layer of Christmas overhead.

LAYERS OF CHRISTMAS.

In the Forty-second street district, from Times Square to the Grand Central zone and northward, Christmas eve will be observed in a thousand ways. Some will thrust nickels into slots for their dinners. Some will enter Pullman cars to ride across the continent. Others will step into a sightseeing bus for Chinatown.

The traffic policeman will dominate a throng of vehicles so dense that a lively fellow can skip for a block from roof to roof. High in a fashionable apartment hotel a child will hang a stocking at a fireplace more capacious than the fireplace in any one-layer farmhouse. Dumbwaiters will be congested with turkeys bound for layers of apartment homes. From a club of distinction a lawyer whose hair is turning gray will be wiring a Christmas message to his mother in Arkansas.

HUNTING FOR CHRISTMAS.

Happily dazed by the manifold festivities of the city was the Skyliner, on his first Christmas eve in New York.

From the stock exchange melee of bonus cheers and ticker tape he ranged ten miles up Broadway, saw childern march, singing, with lanterns, through falling snow to the grave of Clement Moore, author of "The Night Before Christmas," and then he rode halfway back to see what was doing in the Roaring Forties.

Plenty, but it didn't quite seem like Christmas. He found Christmas by following a squad of motorcycle police west from the jazzy glare of Columbus Circle to a large gray church, where hundreds of persons, jammed on broad steps and sidewalk, were pushing through the doorways.

Inside, all seats were occupied, and the deep aisles were thronged with perhaps a thousand, standing, but the Skyliner managed to get in before the police closed the doors. Fortunately he couldn't get out before the ringing of a certain hidden bell, and then Christmas came, and it would have taken that whole squad of police to get the Skyliner to go.

SUCH A DOGGONE CHRISTMAS.

In the rooms of the Humane society, Christmas presents are accumulating for animals without independent means, and soon Fido, Dobbin, Maud, Tabby and Jocko will be walked, led, driven and carried there to receive them.

It is always a bit humiliating for Fido. The society's idea is to give each animal what it needs most, and dog soap is ever the first thing passed out to the canine proletariat. As soon as a dog and boy enuter the cry goes up, "One dog soap!"

What makes it still worse for Fido is that whereas no boy shows any intention of using the dog soap on himself, there is such an awful scramble for dog biscuit, and such an immediate biting into it, not by the pets, but by their small masters, that the committee in charge puts up a sign: "You mustn't eat the dog biscuits, that is for your dogs."

Yet except for the dog biscuit, it is a question whether any of the gifts greatly appeals to the 57 varieties of dog that wag their way into the place. The other gifts are collars, mange medicine, blankets and leads.

A SOFT WORLD FOR CATS.

Dobbin has it easier in the distribution of Christmas gifts. Nobody tries to eat his oats or wear his new nosebag. And partly because his master is older than Fido's, he has his apples, sugar and carrots all to himself. He also gets open bridles, emergency shoes, blankets, humane bits and sponges without number.

Like the dogs, the horses are not precisely the aristocrats of their species. They are the kind that one involuntarily pats on the nose with the remark "Nice old nag" and "Good old plug."

Maud, the mule, is scarce nowadays. Usually she or it is a hurdy-gurdy veteran, with no more pull in musical circles, either because she let out a terrible "hee-haw" in the middle of an amorous Italian tune, or because her joints creak with age.

Tabby, the cat, and the Thomas cat included, have it soft, as usual. In the first place they are carried, because they won't be led. Second, they do not get bits and muzzles. No. Smug and purring, they receive delicious salmon and great gobs of catnip, to "give them the carnival spirit."

Poor Jocky, the monkey, doubtless has his own ideas about Christmas. They take him to the society so a gift may be conferred upon him, and all he gets is a collar and a leash.

Lack of Leadership

Is there anything more dreary and uninteresting in current literature than the average conventional, orthodox, annual message of a president? The original idea of this annual communication was, undoubtedly, to furnish information to congress and the people concerning "the state of the nation" and at the same time to announce a definite policy of the administration. The modern newspaper has made it unnecessary for the president to make any revelations in regard to the government, unless he should do, what he never does in such a document, publish some of the secrets of the state department. So the only worth-while thing left to do would be to communicate to the congress and the nation an administration program of legislation.

I have just been through the message of Mr. Coolidge from this standpoint. If that document throws one ray of light upon any subject whatsoever, I failed to see it. It is rich in platitudes and generous in generalities. For the most part it comments in a meaningless and futile sort of way on each question with which the government is supposed to deal. The final impression is one of ineffectiveness and lack of leadership.

Limited Vision.

Only twice in this long document does Mr. Coolidge seem to be really interested, and then it is upon his favorite subject, economy. He seems only to think in terms of the limitation of expenditures. He seems really aroused, and almost human, when he talks about taxation. Here he shows a presidential indignation against the United States Chamber of Commerce daring to suggest a larger cut in the taxes than he and the secretary of the treasury had proposed. For Presidential Coolidge, the United States government is a huge business corporation and its supreme purpose is to balance its budget.

So we are not surprised when he comes to deal with the greatest catastrophe which this nation has ever suffered, the Mississippi flood, that he should approach it in the spirit of a professional auditor. There is not one throb of sympathy or pulse of pity for the indescribable suffering of the thousands upon thousands of people whose homes and plans and social existence have been wrecked. I doubt if there has ever been as cold-blooded a proposal made by an accredited leader of a great government as his insistence upon the condition that the people of the Mississippi valley, already reduced to a pathetic poverty, should bear an enormous proportion of the cost of river reconstruction.

One is struck, too, with the narrowness of his vision and his utter inability to grasp with any breadth of comprehension the titanic task involved in the mastery and direction of our great river system. He insists upon separating the great problem into unrelated and uncoordinated tasks like the organization of our department bureaus. With the personality of Herbert Hoover, outlined in the thought of the American people in such generous and wholesome outline, sitting there in the cabinet beside the president, Mr. Coolidge seems to shrink into petty proportions.

Significant Omissions.

Despite the length of this message and the almost limitless number of its comments, one is struck with at least two supremely important questions which he does not touch. How could Mr. Coolidge fail to make any allusion whatsoever to the sensational election scandals of Pennsylvania and Illinois, or to mention the assault upon the integrity of our government by the great oil bandits? I do not mean that in either case it would have been proper for him to have anticipated the decision, either of the courts or of the senate, but do we not have a right to expect some moral leadership from our president which would at least encourage those who seek to right public wrongs and to purify our national elections?

The president's perfunctory words concerning international relations and obligations were disappointing in the extreme. The whole world has been waiting for his response to the splendid challenge of Briand, of France, and Steed, of England. In the presence of these definite invitations to the United States to enter into some kind of generous cooperation for the peace of the world, Mr. Coolidge's platitudes about peace and his smug sentences about the righteousness of the United States in its relations to other nations seem like "sounding brass and clanging cymbals."

The final impression of these 10,000 words, which go to make up this presidential message, is the feeling of an utter lack of leadership. One feels that the "state of the nation" is best described by the title of the once popular song, "All Dressed Up and Nowhere to Go." And the only ambition of the president seems to be, that we shall accumulate some more money to buy some more clothes, with which to adorn our national figure, in order that we may pose without any purpose.

EVERYDAY QUESTIONS

BY DR. S. PARKES CADMAN.

South Bend, Ind.

Why do not preachers, priests and teachers of religion give more lucid interpretations of the mysteries they profess to explain and not leave us in the dark on so many vital issues?

Because, like yourself, they are mortal and have to stand on the wrong side of the loom that weaves human fate. In the Avenue des Gobelins, Paris, is the famous establishment whose tapestries have made it so. An average of six inches square is the daily product of a skilled workman, so that the execution of the larger pieces occupies many years. I once watched the process and saw only the under side of the weft. It had no meaning, yet on the upper side it was a superb representation of a hunting scene intended for an emperor.

So is it with the life we live. Things that seem to mean much mean little elsewhere, and those which men often neglect are infinitely important.

It is, therefore, the business of your spiritual guides to stress the need of honest material and faithful workmanship in all things pertaining to daily existence. The pattern is before you; the swiftest shuttle will soon cease to fly. See that you weave a durable fabric which reproduces the beauty and the truth exemplified in your best ideals.

Atlanta, Ga.

For three months I have been lying on my back with a crooked spine and suffering in a way that cannot be expressed very easily. There are times when I can write and read. Until recently I have been an agnostic, but since my affliction I have had a complete change of viewpoint and now believe in the values of religion. Some of the question which particularly trouble me, however, are as follows:

1. Why did God select the Israelites as His chosen people?

2. We know that God knows all things and that Christ was good, yet in every place where Christ described the coming of the end of the world He stated that those who were living at the time He was on earth would not die until that event had come to pass. 1900 years have passed and yet that event has not happened and those to whom Christ spoke have long since died. What did He mean?

3. Does not the parable of the workers in the vineyard for one penny contradict the parable of the talents? How can they be reconciled?

4. Do you believe that the endless soul of the righteous man also has no beginning? In other words, was not each one of us in a high state of spiritual existence prior to our earthly existence?

If you can give me any information on these questions I shall deeply appreciate it. I have faith, but it rests as yet upon a somewhat weak foundation.

Am I asking the impossible when I state that I want to believe with my mind as well as with my heart?

1. God chose Israel as the vehicle of His will to other nations because its religious aptitudes excelled those of any contemporary people.

2. By the "end of the world" our Lord meant the end of that period. A new age dawned after His death and resurrection, and many who heard Him lived in it and shared its spiritual hopes and achievements.

3. The workers in the vineyard did what each one was required to do and therefore each one was treated according to the original agreement. The recipients of the talents were rewarded in the same manner. Both groups fulfilled their contracts as originally made, except in the case of the man who buried his talent in a napkin. There is therefore no inconsistency between the two parables.

4. Personally, I do not believe we have had a pre-existent state. Even if this could be proved, nobody recollects it, and where there is no consciousness there might as well be no existence.

By all means do what you can to satisfy your reason, but do not allow it to stultify or deny the rights of your heart.

Is it not possible for men and women to be buried intellectually and morally; dead while they live?

Undoubtedly, or regeneration could not have achieved its marvels in numberless souls. Before it happened they were comparable to ruined temples:

The bat and owl inhabit these.
The snake lies on the altar stone;
The sacred vessels smolder near,
The image of the God is gone.

Then came their awakening and renewal, and others soon knew the difference. Nor is this stupefaction confined to the ignorant and the heathen. Brilliant and gifted spirits have experienced it, and many such still do. One of them says in a recent confession: "I believe that when I die I shall rot and nothing of my ego will survive." Comment is superfluous. A condition so scornful of life's best preferences and so defiant of its highest witness but emphasizes the apostolic warning that "the world by wisdom knew not God."

Thinks Conductors Should Sell Tickets

Editor Constitution: The articles appearing in the daily papers in regard to the purchasing of street car tickets (under the new public service ruling) both for school children and patrons of the Oglethorpe line read as though it will be necessary for those who wish to buy tickets to go to the places named by the power company (their offices) for that purpose; if this is the intent of the new public service commission's order the benefit derived from the reduction will be neglible, for few persons will have time to go to the power company's offices when they are out of tickets.

The conductors should have the tickets to sell or let patrons ride at ticket rates.

Atlanta Has Entertained 61,153 Convention Guests, 328 Conventions in Year

Convention and Tourist Bureau To Close Successful Period Wednesday With Election.

With 48 conventions already booked for Atlanta during 1928 and one for 1929, while a total of 328 such gatherings were held here in 1927, the board of directors of the Atlanta convention and tourist bureau will meet at 1 o'clock next Wednesday for its 15th annual business session and luncheon. The board meeting this year will be held at Davison-Paxon company, according to announcement Saturday by Fred Houser, executive secretary of the bureau.

Records kept during 1927 show that 61,153 convention visitors came to Atlanta to attend the 328 conventions and events staged here during the year now drawing to a close. Using the estimate of the International Association of Convention Bureau Secretaries, that the average convention visitor spends $11.25 per day and stays for a period of three days, this shows that these visitors spent $2,063,913.75 while in Atlanta. Mr. Houser points out, however, that this is a minimum estimate and states thate, while many visitors stay longer than three days, few are here for less time. He also declares that other estimates put the average daily expenditure per person at $34.40, but asserts that the local bureau prefers to use the lower figure in its reports in order to stay safely on the conservative side.

848,947 Delegates in Past.

Figures on registration, Secretary Houser said, are always checked at the close of each meeting, so that any error in advance estimates, in either direction, may be rectified on the records.

During the 15 years of the convention bureau's existence, the secretary reports, Atlanta has entertained a total of 3,686 meetings and events, with a total attendance of 848,947 delegates, who spent $26,148,063.75 while in the city.

"Prior to the organization of the convention bureau in 1913," the report continues, "this city entertained around 35 meetings each year. In 1913 the number was increased to 75; in 1914 to 100; in 1915 to 140; in 1916 to 168, and so on, until it has reached or surpassed the 300 mark for each of the past three years.

"When the southern newspaper publishers, met here last July 4-5; the National Ice Industries association, November 1-4; southern commercial teachers, November 24-25; the Asphalt association, November 28-December 3, and others, they felt the pulse of the spirit of Atlanta and carried home with them a keener feeling for Atlanta's citizenry and pleasant memories that will linger long. To mention these, however, is only characteristic of the 300 conventions entertained in our good city annually."

Three International.

Of the 328 conventions held in Atlanta in 1927, the report states, three were international in scope; 29 were national; 57 southern; 52 southeastern; 86 state; 21 regional; 24 district; 36 were conferences, and 20 were events.

Representatives to the various meetings were attracted here from 31 foreign countries, as well as from every state in the union. Among the countries represented were Africa, Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Cuba, Czecho-Slovakia, Denmark, Egypt, England, France, Germany, Holland, Hungary, India, Italy, Japan, Mexico, New Zealand, Norway, Palestine, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Russia, Scotland, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and Turkey.

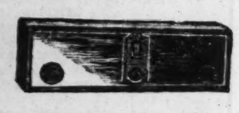

"As to publicity," the secretary's report comments, "we have had the wholehearted and untiring cooperation of the three local newspapers in keeping before the public news and views of conventions in Atlanta. Aside from that we have carried regular monthly advertisements in two trade papers and nine trade journals; have carried stories at different times on Atlanta's convention facilities, club life, and general information about the city, including its strategic location, commercial advantages, etc. The publicity department has functioned actively this year and the work of 'selling' the prospective visitor on the city has been carried on most efficiently. An average of 20 pieces of literature per day for the entire year has been sent out, under 2-cent postage, accompanied by letter. This does not include the literature sent out in bulk lots to meetings in distant cities, nor pamphlets distributed to visitors while attending meetings in Atlanta."

Bureau Officers.

Officers and directors of the bureau are F. J. Paxon, president; Ivan E. Allen, vice president and chairman finance committee; W. T. Perkerson, treasurer; Fred Houser, executive secretary; Harvey M. Smith, M. S. Hill, George Ripley, Jr., W. O. Foote, J. A. Dunwody, Edwin F. Johnson, Scott Hudson, W. T. Winn, W. P. Heath, Gordon Burnette, William Candler, R. F. Pennington, Frank Neely, William C. Royer, W. O. Stamps, H. A. Tindel, C. G. Beck, Harry Zobel, Frank L. Butler, James F. DeJarnette, C. L. Dinkler, Dr. E. G. Jacobs, Earl Knight, H. Warner Martin, C. J. Bloodworth, L. H. Beall, F. E. Maffett and George West.

The late W. W. Orr, whose death occurred Wednesday, also was a director of the bureau.

Betty Blythe, who returned to the screen last spring in Dolores Costello's starring "A Million Bid" after an absence of several months, will be seen in support of the Warner star in her forthcoming special, "Glorious Betsy," now being directed on the coast by Alan Crosland. Miss Blythe will play the role of Princess Fredericka in this story of the Napoleonic era based on the play by Rida Johnson Young, which was adapted to screen purposes by Anthony Coldeway.

Modern Port Facilities at Mobile, Soon To Be Completed, Another Engineering Feat of Maj. Gen. William L. Sibert

When the state of Alabama decided that there should be built at Mobile a modern ocean terminal for the benefit of the state's industrial development, to cost ten million dollars, officials sought as a member of the commission which was to prosecute the work a national figure as, not only a member of the commission, but chief engineer and general manager of the project.

That man was Major General William L. Sibert, United States army, retired, one of the world's greatest engineers and one of the army officers on whose shoulders fell the burden of building the Panama canal. He refused retirement when it was offered for that great work and continued to "carry on" until the world war, during which he organized the chemical warfare service used by the United States army. He was retired in 1920 after long and faithful and meritorious service to his nation.

General Sibert left his seclusion in Kentucky after retirement, where he had planned to live the remainder of his life on a farm with a pack of fox hounds and some saddle horses, because he was first of all an Alabamian and because his state wanted his services in the port development as he was considered best fitted to aid the state.

The great Mobile terminal for ocean going vessels is nearing completion. General Sibert expects it to be ready in its entirety by April 1, 1928. The Constitution this morning is showing in its rotogravure section a full page of pictures of the work being accomplished. And below, General Sibert, in an article written for The Constitution, tells of the work and what it will mean to the entire south, Atlanta especially, where General Sibert has many friends with whom he has visited and by whom he has been entertained on many occasions.

BY MAJ. GEN. WM. L. SIBERT, For The Atlanta Constitution.

Some of the leading thinkers of the state of Alabama, foreseeing the industrial development of that state in consequence of its mineral resources and its water-power possibilities, thought that the state should aid in this industrial development by constructing a modern ocean terminal at Mobile. But the constitution of 1901 prevented the state from entering into works of internal improvement or lending money or credit in aid of such. It therefore became necessary to amend the constitution before the state could embark on such an enterprise, and an amendment giving the state the needed authority was voted upon by the people in 1920 and was defeated. Not despairing, the amendment under which the present project is being carried out was voted upon by the people in 1922 and passed.

The amendment which finally passed enabled the state, when authorized by appropriate laws passed by the legislature, to engage in the work of internal improvement, of promoting, developing, constructing, maintaining and operating all harbors or seaports within the state or its jurisdiction at a cost not exceeding $10,000,000. The enabling act under which the improvement is being carried on was approved September 18, 1913. This act empowered the governor, with the advice and concurrence of the state docks commisison, to sell state bonds not exceeding in the aggregate the sum of $10,000,000 for carrying on the work, said bonds being a general obligation of the state.

Commission in Charge.

This work was undertaken through a commission composed of three members: ex-Governor Charles Henderson, Frank G. Blair and myself. No salary is paid a commissioner as such. I am not only a commissioner but the chief engineer and general manager of the project and for this service receive a compensation. The recent law makes the commission self-perpetuating, the remaining members to fill a vacancy, subject to confirmation by the state senate. The commission itself employs and discharges all members of the force. A commissioner can only be removed by impeachment. Politics is the greatest obstacle to success in any state or municipal enterprise and this is one job that has been entirely free from politics, and it is hoped under this law that it will be kept free.

While the congress of the United States, when the Panama canal was completed, rewarded the army and navy officers who had been members of the Isthmian canal commission by allowing them to retire at any time that they saw fit, I did not retire from the army until 1920, after the world war. My principal work in this war was the organization of the chemical warfare service of the army. Upon retirement, I moved to a farm that I had bought near Bowling Green, Ky., gathered together a good pack of fox hounds and home saddle horses and was starting to enjoy life after 40 years of strenuous labor; but, on account of the fact that I was born in the state of Alabama, a committee came to see me and told me that I ought to come to Alabama and build this port. After the governor had assured me that the work would be kept entirely out of politics and that I would be given an absolutely free hand in prosecuting the work, I decided to undertake it.

Seven Years at Canal.

As to my connection with the Panama canal, I was a member of the Isthmian canal commission and served here for seven years in that capacity, having direct charge of the work near the Atlantic end of the canal, which included the building of the Gatun locks and dam, the excavation of the canal from Gatun to the Atlantic ocean, and the building of the west breakwater in Colon bay.

I came to Mobile in December, 1923; consequently, had nothing to do with the framing of the constitutional amendment or the enabling act that placed it in force, but came as a constructing engineer.

The only site peculiarly suitable for the development of the terminals at Mobile was along Mobile river just north of the present docks of the Mobile & Ohio railroad, and this site was not available unless the Louisville & Nashville railroad main line for about three miles of its length was moved landward some 2,000 feet and rebuilt through a swamp. This necessitated rearranging the yards of the Mobile & Ohio and Southern railroads.

Rail Head Cooperated.

W. L. Mapother, the late president of the Louisville & Nashville railroad, took a very broad view of the situation and stated that he was willing to cooperate in any way practicable so long as he protected the property of his company. He agreed to having the railroad moved back, the state to pay for the moving but the railroad company to pay for any benefits that would accrue to the road in consequence of its new elevation.

It was of course necessary to buy a site for this terminal, and 550 acres of swamp land in the city limits of Mobile was purchased for this purpose, approximately at the price at which it had been assessed for taxation.

One Mile creek ran through this site in such a way as to materially injure it for dock purposes and it became necessary, in addition to moving the railroad, to move the creek, and in doing this a diversion channel a little more than one mile long was excavated, turning the waters of One Mile creek into Three Mile creek. This canal was made wide enough and deep enough for barge navigation and consequently opened up quite a territory for possible industries.

The purchasing of the land, the digging of this diversion canal, the rebuilding of the Louisville & Nashville railroad through the swamp, and the time taken in making arrangements with all the railroads interested, consumed about two years. In the meantime, definite plans were made for the port.

Work Started February, 1926.

The Louisville & Nashville railroad accepted its new line on February 15, 1926. In the meantime, advertisement for bids had been made and work of actual construction was commenced on that date; and if the present contracts are completed on time, all of the work in connection with this project should be finished by April 1, 1928.

The legislature in its act of September, 1923, made only $5,000,000 of the authorized amount available and the remaining $5,000,000 was made available in January, 1927. This delayed the prosecution of the work.

The first two conditions that were laid down as necessary in the plan were: First, that the docks should be equally accessible to all railroads entering Mobile; second, that the terminal plan should be such that ships would find safe anchor at the docks during tropical storms in the Gulf of Mexico, which happen about once every ten years but are serious when they do come. This area being swamp, with no industries on it, gave the designers an unusual opportunity to lay out a plan that would reduce to a minimum the cost of handling freight from rail to ship or vice versa. All railroads were brought together in one yard, in which the docks commission and such railroads all have receiving tracks, and in which the railroads themselves can interchange commerce.

Railroads Built.

In accomplishing this, the state docks commission built about five miles of railroad to the northwest to enable two of the railroads entering Mobile to easily enter this interchange yard. This terminal railway was built with the further purpose of providing a permanent way for the entrance of any new railroads into Mobile and providing connection with all the other railroads, with the city, and with the docks. In addition to this interchange yard, a classification yard that will hold at present about 1,000 cars was built in order to classify the freight for the particular ship berth when it is brought into such yard from the interchange yard.

In order to provide shelter for ships at Mobile during storms, a pier and slip system was adopted and the piers or wharves were built on land, one end at the river, and the space between them dredged out, making a continuous channel into the river where the government of the United States maintains a navigable depth of 30 feet. The piers were built higher than the storm tides that enter Mobile bay during hurricanes.

In the design of the terminal, two especial requirements were complied with: First, to facilitate transfer from car to ship or vice versa, which was solved by building on the apron or wharf proper, three tracks, with crossovers at each ship's berth by means of which cars can be placed at any berth without interfering with cars at any other berth. There is an especial need of such an arrangement at Mobile because about 75 per cent of the outgoing cargo can best be handled directly from car to ship. This cargo consists of forest products and of iron and steel products from northern Alabama.

Second Big Factor.

The advantage of extensive warehouses at shipside was a second big factor in the design. The piers are 1,600 feet long and 560 feet wide with a slip 350 feet wide between piers, and in order to provide suitable warehouses at shipside more than 20 acres of such warehouses are either built or are under construction, the hope being that business houses selling in Cuba, Mexico, Central America, or the Pacific coast, will keep in these warehouses a reasonable supply in order to meet urgent needs. It is also hoped that shippers of canned goods and other products of the Pacific coast, as well as dealers in sugar and coffee, will use them in a similar manner. It is not often that a builder of an ocean terminal can produce the land at a low enough price to provide such extensive warehouses at shipsides, but enough land was available for such purposes at Mobile.

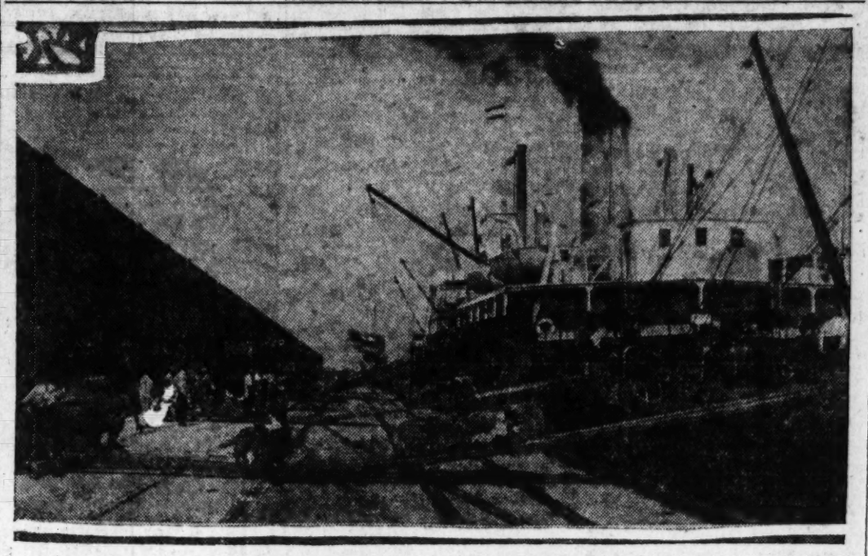

Practically all the land that the state bought was from one to two feet above tide. This type of land was really advantageous because it was necessary to dispose of the material dredged from the slips, as well as the material in the river that it was necessary to remove in order to bring deep water to the west bank, and by placing this material on the land it was elevated and thus made exceedingly attractive for shipside industrial sites.

The cotton warehouse, with its compress, transit shed, etc., is completely finished and in operation. Pier No. 1 in its entirety will be completed in January, 1928, pier No. 2 and pier No. 3 at the latest by April. Pier No. 3 will be an open pier and will be utilized, at least, until commerce demands an increase in terminal facilities, for handling heavy materials that do not require shelter.

Material-Handling Plant.

In addition to the piers, warehouses, etc., referred to above, the state is building a modern coal and material-handling plant on the water front. The largest use expected of this plant will be the handling of coal from car to ship. Through it coal can be loaded at the rate of 600 tons per hour. This plant can also be used in handling any cargo that can travel on a 42-inch belt, from ship to storage or from ship to cars or from barge to ship. In addition to coal, it is expected to handle through this plant manganese ore, phosphate rock, sulphur, bauxite ore, etc.

Mobile is simply one of the ports especially available to Atlanta, either for export or import. No other southern city has the same advantages as to such movements of commerce as Atlanta. Her geographical location is such that she can ship to Charleston, Savannah, Jacksonville, Mobile, Pensacola, Gulfport and New Orleans at rates not materially different, which enables her to take advantage of more frequent sailings and consequently to be in touch with more ports of the world than almost any city in this or any other country. The docks that the state of Alabama is building are available to all states under the same terms and conditions as they are used by people of Alabama, because Alabama knows that the greater the variety of commerce that can come to the port, the greater the number of ships that will come there and the more extended will be the markets for the products of Alabama, as well as for the products of other states that can reach the port economically.

Major General W. L. Sibert Is World-Famous Engineer

Major General William L. Sibert, world-famous engineer, who is in charge of the Mobile port development, was commissioned a second lieutenant in the engineering corps on his graduation from West Point with the class of 1884. Three years later he was graduated from the Engineer School of Application and received an assignment as assistant engineer of river work in Kentucky.

As a captain he was engaged in construction of a ship canal between the Great Lakes during 1892, and later was appointed instructor in civil engineering at the Engineer School of Application, where he served throughout 1898 and 1899 with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

General Sibert was chief engineer of the eighth army corps and chief engineer and general manager of the Manila and Dagupan railroad, Philippine Islands, returning to the United States in 1900 to take charge of river and harbor work from headquarters at Louisville and Pittsburgh.

Member Canal Commission.

From 1907 to 1914 General Sibert was a member of the Isthmian Canal commission, and then went to China as chairman of the board of engineers who investigated flood problems on the Huai river under auspices of the Chinese government and the American Red Cross.

General Sibert built the Gatun locks, Panama Canal, the west breakwater, in Colon harbor, and also excavated the channel from Gatun dam to the Atlantic ocean.

For his services in Panama he received the official thanks of congress. He became a brigadier general in 1915 and was promoted to major general in 1917; commanded and trained the first division, first of America's troops to reach France, and later served as commander of the eastern department of the United States army, with headquarters at Charleston.

Directed Chemical Warfare.

General Sibert was made director of chemical warfare in 1918. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal by the United States and named to the command of the Legion of Honor by France.

Degrees have been conferred on General Sibert by the University of Alabama, which he attended before entering West Point, and the University of Nebraska.

General Sibert is now building a port terminal for his native state of Alabama, the funds for which have been voted by the people. As chairman and chief engineer of the Alabama state docks commission he is directing construction at Mobile of a large plant for the interchange of freight between rail and water carriers. This work will make the Alabama seaport an important factor in the economic development of the south, state officers say.

Atlanta's Public Schools

What They Are Doing—What They Are Trying To Do.

This is the sixth of a series of articles on Atlanta's public school system, prepared under the direction of the Personnel Association of Atlanta. They are published with the view of informing parents and the public on the schools' work. The entire system, from kindergarten to high schools, will be discussed.

ELEMENTARY SCIENCE AND NATURE STUDY.

The word "science" from the Latin verb "scire" (to know), means, according to the Century dictionary: Knowledge, comprehension or understanding of facts or principles.

"Elementary" means of the elements or beginnings, therefore the foundation upon which other things are to be built.

Applying these definitions to the title of this article, we have just what we are trying to give to Atlanta school children in the department of elementary science and nature study.

Beginners form an understanding of the facts and principles of nature as she slowly and quietly, but firmly and persistently, carries forward the great plan of the universe.

For instance, birds are seen and heard in and around Atlanta, even in the shadows of our great buildings, in ever-increasing numbers, because our children have learned the truth about them. They are citizens busy from morn until night getting food for themselves, and by so doing increasing the food supply in our vegetable gardens, protecting our trees and shrubs, and making beautiful our flower gardens, all because they like for food the insects that feed on our plants. Birds are beginning to feel that their friends are many in Atlanta and they do not fear to stay. They even stay over the winter in greater numbers because a friendly hand is ever ready to add to the food supply if a shortage seems imminent.

Atlanta's children respect Citizen Bird because they know he has fully qualified in the capacity of citizen. Now they build houses for him and otherwise invite him to stay.

Learn Value of Trees.

Another friend that has qualified as citizen in the eyes of our children is the green plant. The plant, of course, has been the best of citizens all the time, only the children did not know. At times, before they knew, children often cut into the bark, or broke the branches off or started a fire under a tree (one of our green plant citizens) without knowing the great injury they were giving.

But knowledge again has changed the point of view and the tree is recognized for its great contribution to the community in which it lives, rendered so quietly that one may not know unless he is told.

Atlanta's boys and girls have been told about trees. They know trees regulate the fall of rain upon the earth and the flow of water upon and within the earth. They know that terrible floods do not occur where Citizen Tree has been left to manage the water flow. They know, too, that the tree regulates the moisture supply in our atmosphere and softens the heat of the summer sun and lessens the speed of the winter winds.

Atlanta's children are seeing trees with their minds and hearts and loving them for the many "good turns they do daily."

To prove it, they have chosen a tree to help them make their city beautiful, and each year are planting great numbers of them in every section of the city.

Five thousand dogwood trees have been added to our city's ornamentation by the children within the last five years. Many more have been added because the spirit has spread. Other green plant citizens that have won the approbation and admiration of the children when they came to know them were the various food plants and the flowers.

The former, they have found, make all the food the world has, for though that food be animal it has in turn taken its food from the plant. As knowledge increases, respect increases for the great food manufacturers of the world and for the great beautifiers, the flowers.

Growing of Plants.

That finer food plants and more of them, and finer flowers and more of them, may be made by proper care and special propagation is nature's great secret, and children thrill at the accomplishments of Mr. Burbank and other plant wizards who discovered the secret and now and then they try out for themselves just what can be done by attention to plant growing. This requires testing for and correction of acids in soil, adding the right plant food to the soil, cultivation, etc.

Last spring and summer Atlanta was beautiful in her many colored costume of flowers as a result of the children's experiments in flower growing. The child himself increases his own value to his city in helping to make it more beautiful with flowers.

Adequate protection to a good citizen is the promise of any well-organized city. Hence adequate protection must be given to the green plant citizens. Our boys and girls are making a very careful study of the friends and enemies of these plants. The friends are offered every protection. The hiding places of the enemy insects are found out and methods of destruction are given careful attention.

Now the boy knows toads and frogs and many snakes are friends. He knows how and where mosquitoes and flies breed and how to get rid of them in their breeding places. He is interested in which insects are friends and which are enemies of his food and flower plants.

In short, because of his understanding of these truths in natural science he is interested in the great world problem of the demand and supply of food.

MY DREAM-LAND

BY ERNEST NEAL

Time, you scamp, you've made me old,
You've touched my hair with white—
But in memory's magic dream-land
My spirit, feather-light,
Is roving fields of pleasure
'Neath boyhood's golden skies,
And by me walks a little girl
With tender, loving eyes.

We dreamed then of the future;
I dream now of the past—
Both pictures, mingling in my soul,
Ecstatic glamours cast.
What was and is in dream-land
But brightens up the real,
For love-light casts no shadows
In that realm of the ideal.

The South Carolina System Of Paving Her Highways On the State Unit Plan

Editor Constitution: I see in your editorial today, reviewing the remarkable statement of Chairman C. E. Jones, of the South Carolina highway commission, showing that 529.156 miles of paving contracts will soon have been let in that small state during 1927, at a total cost of approximately $13,200,000, in addition to several million dollars of grading and bridge contracts, that you say:

"South Carolina is proceeding on the 'pay-as-you-go' plan, but the state is the unit under the law, and paved roads are connectedly built, and not in patches."

This may profitably receive a little further explanation to enable your readers to better understand the remarkable system under which South Carolina is improving her roads:

The state is compelled by law to allot to every county in the state annually its proportion of the state income for construction, based on the mileage in the counties and the cost of improving the county mileage. Under the law, the state is allowed to give to any county a contract to pay to it, its total sum, or any portion of it, annually, over a term of years. And the county is empowered to issue bonds against these contracts to pay, from the state. The bonds are issued by the counties at 4 1-2 to 5 1-2 per cent. The state retires the bonds annually with the annual payments due the county. The county is allowed by law to pay the interest out of the 2 cents gasoline tax allowed to the counties. So the state pays the principal and the interest. The county is out nothing, and gets all her roads, or her principal roads, at once. Under this system the most of the counties are putting down permanent pavements. The bonds are paid off usually in ten to fifteen years. A county can get a reimbursement contract to pave one particular road, or several roads, or all its roads.

This remarkable system, a product of slow evolution in that state, is a good substitute for state bonds. Those in Georgia who are opposed to state bonds but who favor county bonds, may well study this South Carolina system, which "gets there."

Chairman Jones recently stated that the schedule of proportionate allotments to the counties had been worked out for years to come, and that little more than clerical work was necessary to take care of the system; that "any bookkeeper with average ability can properly issue all papers and documents in connection therewith. He recently said: "It is conservatively estimated that the construction expenditures for the biennium 1927-1928 will aggregate the enormous sum of $28,000,000 or more." The area of Georgia is 59,265 square miles; of South Carolina 30,989 square miles, a difference which gives powerful emphasis to South Carolina's 'system.'"

There is this defect in the South Carolina plan at present, however. The 2 cents gasoline tax is distributed among the counties on the basis of the automobile license money received from the counties. Some of the city counties thus receive as much as $165,000 per annum from this source—more than enough to pay annual interest on bonds to pave at once all their state roads.

Others of the counties (the thinly populated ones) receive less than $10,000 per annum from this source—not enough to pay interest on any considerable amount of pavement bonds.

So it is that some of the counties are doing no paving. But their allotments are accumulating yearly and they can "draw down" on them at any time, and pave as far as the accumulated sum will go.

Or they can increase ad valorem taxes to pay interest. If the South Carolina gasoline tax was distributed as Georgia's is, on the basis of highway mileage in the counties—the much better system, since it is mileage that is to be improved—every county in South Carolina would have enough income from this source to pay interest on enough bonds to pave its principal roads at once.

This would be a fine system to adopt in Georgia, with a few changes, such as that suggested above. There is no question about it, South Carolina is moving right ahead under it—"it works." H. C. MIDDLETON.

Indorses Editorial Calling for Increased Interest in Voting

Editor Constitution: Your splendid editorial in this morning's issue in regard to the unfortunate lack of interest in voting should receive more than casual attention. It is a matter that is extremely vital to every person of every age. The lack of interest manifested is causing the functioning of all departments of our national, state and municipal governing to fall in the hands of officials who are incompetent, and in nowise fitted for the job. We get a few good men always, but we get them tied up with more sorry ones in such a way that nothing of definite good can be accomplished. To-wit: look at our state legislature, city council and our board of county commissioners. Some very excellent men in all of them, but the great majority have absolutely no business being elected to such responsible places.

I think the chief cause of this lack of interest can be covered by two paramount causes, both can be easily corrected.

First: We need two major parties. From time immemorial, we have all been voting the same national ticket, just because our daddies before us did it, and no matter who the candidate or what the issues, we just shut our eyes, refuse to think, but just blindly "follow the leader," and lately, most of our leaders are merely riding our backs to the public pap trough.

Second: Every hardship in the world that it is possible to impose on the voter, in order to become eligible to vote, is put on him. Annual registration is a nuisance that is unnecessary. Let a citizen properly register once. That registration should be permanent as long as he performs the obligation of citizenship, in the proper payment of his taxes, etc. Should he fail to do these things, the issuance of a fi. fa. against him could automatically disqualify him. Having to go to the courthouse each year and register for state elections and then to the city hall for city elections, and then possibly to have to stand in line and wait, is an unnecessary burden that is being imposed on the voters, and it looks like they are resenting it and in doing so, we are just turning our governmental affairs to the "personally interested" and the incompetent.

I hope, however, that you will keep everlastingly after us, and by so doing you will be a big factor for better and more intellectual administration of government.

Opportunity for State To Hold for the Public Great Forestry Asset

Editor Constitution: A foreign corporation is offering for sale about one hundred square miles of Georgia soil.

This land lies astride the crest and upon the slopes of the Blue Ridge mountains in Georgia. It includes property surrounding or embracing such points as the famed Neel's Gap, Enotah (Bald) mountain, the highest peak in Georgia, and other famous peaks, gaps and beauty spots in the Georgia mountains. Some of the most magnificent scenery in the south is included, and it embraces what is probably the finest hardwood timber area in the southeast. This magnificent principality has been owned for a number of years by the Pfister-Vogel Leather company, of Milwaukee. Their ownership, up to now, has been a blessing to the state. They have jealously guarded it against timber poachers and fire, employing a competent forest supervisor and using every precaution to preserve the timber.

But this property is located at the very head of watersheds to the north and to the south. If it should fall into the hands of lumbermen now, to be cut over and left bare, what estimate can be placed upon the total injury to the state?

In 1925 the legislature created the state board of forestry, and authorized the governor to acquire land by purchase approved by the legislature. Funds to pay for such purchases were left to future provision by the general assembly. This pioneering was good as far as it went, but as it stands now we have the machinery for forest supervision but nothing to supervise.

The question emphasized by the dumping of this immense domain upon the market is whether or not the state can afford to wait to make a beginning until forestry sentiment has been nurtured and brought to such maturity that the professional politician will seek its refreshing shades.

An interesting sidelight upon this subject is that there has existed upon our statute books since 1877 a law prohibiting any foreign corporation from owning more than 5,000 acres of land in Georgia. (Code 2206). In the face of this law tens of thousands of acres of Georgia soil is now filling up the rivers and streams of this state to fatten bank accounts of citizens of other states. And they call it developing Georgia!

The federal government has long recognized the sound economic value of investment in Georgia forests. In this same section it owns tens of thousands of acres, acquired by purchase or condemnation at prices ranging from $4 to $8 per acre, in fee simple. It now offers to lease this same land, one-half acre to the person, to us short-sighted brethren for $30 per acre per annum. It sounds like the government had made a good trade with our folks.

It would be a fine thing for Georgia if the board of forestry, the governor, the press and public-spirited citizens of the state could fall upon some plan to save to its citizens this great asset.

"Sorrell and Son" Howard Anniversary Screen Attraction

"Sorrell and Son" has been acclaimed everywhere it has been shown as one of the finest if not the very finest picture produced during the past five years.

The long awaited screen version of that novel of father-and-son devotion which has been read by hundreds of thousands of readers throughout the world will be shown starting tomorrow in connection with Anniversary week at the Howard. It is easily ranked among the year's five best pictures. In many ways it is the most absorbing achievement in cinema realism ever made.

Brilliant direction, acting so real that the eminent players seem to be living their roles, fine settings—including historic spots in England, where much of the story was filmed—and flawless photography combine to create what is nearly the ultimate in entertainment.

H. B. Warner, playing his first part since "The King of Kings;" Anna Q. Nilsson, Alice Joyce, Nils Asther, Carmel Myers, Mary Nolan, Norman Trevor and Louis Wolheim are some of the artists who share honors in the picturization of Warwick Deeping's novel.

"Sorrell and Son" is a story of father love and son devotion, a story of England during the post-war period, when heroes came home, only to find their peace-time jobs appropriated by stay-at-homes, and facing the necessity of working in the most menial tasks to support themselves and their families.

"Captain Stephen Sorrell" was one of these heroes; not only was his job gone when he returned to London after the armistice, but his wife was faithless. Left with a young son as his wife deserts him for a wealthy profiteer, "Sorrell" works as a hotel porter in order to educate the lad and give him a chance in life.

Much of "Sorrell and Son" was filmed in England and with the aid of the author, Warwick Deeping. All of the film "Sorrell and Son" is faithful to the spirit and letter of Warwick Deeping's book, and the ending of the film is that of the book. Herbert Brenon, who made "Peter Pan" and "Beau Geste," says that "Sorrell and Son" is his best motion picture. A father himself, Mr. Brenon believes the story of "Sorrell and Son" is that of any father and son, and that the appeal of the film as entertainment is supplemented by its spiritual effect on men and women who view it.

'TWO FLAMING YOUTHS' ON GEORGIA SCREEN

A travesty of life with a circus sideshow is the basis for Paramount's latest release in which W. C. Fields and Chester Conklin are starred. It will be shown all week at Keith's Georgia theater as the featured film play.

"Two Flaming Youths" is the title of this uproariously funny picture, in which W. C. Fields is seen as "the barker" with the sideshow, while Chester Conklin registers one of the best hits of his life as the small-town officer and censor for the community.

Fat girls, slim men, living skeletons, beaded ladies and freaks of all kinds are shown in W. C. Fields' sideshow. Musical acts, dancing girls and other forms of entertainment are given until one wonders where they all come from and how they rounded up so many different kinds of people under one big tent!

"Two Flaming Youths" is said to be one of the big laughs of the season, and with two clever comedians there is no reason why it should not please everyone, for Fields has spent his life in the theater and knows all about getting laughs. With a sideshow as a background this one should "click" from the start.

'THE GIRL FROM RIO' IS METROPOLITAN FILM

The Metropolitan offers this week "The Girl From Rio," starring Carmel Myers with Walter Pidgeon, under its new policy, "Big Pictures, Little Prices."

It is a romantic adventure drama of South America, combining all elements that make for real entertainment. Set in the picturesque and colorful background of old Spain, in the cafe in Rio de Janeiro, the story weaves about an Englishman, the Brazilian representative of a large coffee concern, who falls in love with a dashing young dancer, thereby making an enemy of her Spanish lover. Exotic love and violent hate are graphically portrayed as the enemy schemes to ruin his rival but is outmatched by the love of the senorita for the Englishman.

Carmel Myers plays the title role and plays it well. Her brunette beauty is admirably suited to the part of the Spanish heartbreaker and her real histrionic ability meets the test in the tempestuous role. Walter Pidgeon, as the Englishman, gives a sympathy and poise which stands out in contrast to Miss Myers' fiery spirit.

The sets used in making "The Girl From Rio" are unusually handsome and colorful. Spanish atmosphere through the whirl of the dance, clicking castanets and gorgeous costumes imbue the ravishing romance with a deep zest and fiery appeal. The carnival scenes at the cafe are exceptionally beautifully done in technicolor.

To vividly grasp the spirit of the picture in music, Enrico Leide has composed a Spanish melody for which Floride Carey has written a lyric, "Reverie." Mr. Leide is a recognized musician of Atlanta and Miss Carey, a well-known writer of verse. The overture selected by Mr. Leide is a melody of South American tunes.

Other high lights on the unusually good program are "Dog Shy," one of Charley Chase's best numbers, an educational novelty, "Modern Whaling," and Metropolitan News and Views.

Oh, my goodness, just look at the pair on the upper left! You're already looking, eh? Well, about the only thing one could say to this is that they're to be seen in "The Girl from Rio" at the Metropolitan theater all next week. And another thing! If you can think of anybody who looks sweater than our own Laura LaPlante (we wish she was), send her around. She's featured in "Silk Stockings" on the Capitol screen this week—sure, we're going. Now, it looks like Anna Q. was enticing the very young boy friend away from something, in the photo on the upper right, and she probably is, in this scene from "Sorrell and Son" at the Howard. On the lower left, Ches Conklin is acting foolish with one of the numerous females in "Two Flaming Youths" at the Georgia. On the lower right is a scene from "Motherhood" at the Rialto theater.

'Silk Stockings' Current Picture At the Capitol

Interested in "Silk Stockings?"

"Yes" is probably the answer of both male and female, and consequently the screen of the Capitol theater this week should be of particular interest to all persons coming under the two classifications. For Laura LaPlante, beyond whom there is no blonder, will be seen as the beautiful star of a picture, "Silk Stockings," which from all reports, is one of the best little comedies of the season.

"Silk Stockings" was adapted from the stage play, "A Pair of Silk Stockings," by Cyril Harcourt, which scored a tremendous success on Broadway.

The picture is even more successful than was the stage comedy. The credit for this goes to various people, Miss LaPlante, the star; the supporting members of the cast; the director, Wesley Ruggles; the scenarist, Beatrice Van.

The problem of adapting a play to the screen is a difficult one and is usually done with the director aiding the writer. The stage relies on smart lines and the screen on smart action.

Thus action indicated in the lines of a play is shown on the screen as action.

The comedy element is not lost sight of, however, and the "gag" lines of the play are incorporated into screen sub-titles whenever possible. The title-writer must also add titles in keeping with the spirit of the photoplay where the stage lines do not cover the cinema situation.

The story concerns itself with the very delightful experiences of a young married couple who are plunged into various hilarious situations. John Harron, as the star's husband, is excellent as, indeed, are the whole cast. The story and direction draw the same rating which combines to make this one of those ludicrous yet refreshing human comedies which no one who enjoys motion pictures can afford to miss.

Otis Harlan, well-known comic, is admirable in his role which he enacts with a fine polish. William Austin gains his share of laughs while Marcella Daly is largely responsible for that pair of silk stockings which makes so much fun as evidence at the divorce trial, said divorce never being granted by the judge who is a friend of each of the young couple, unknown to the other.

Wesley Ruggles has placed another laurel wreath on his brow for this very entertaining directorial vehicle. In the supporting cast which does its capable work well toward the end of the producing laughter are Heinie Conklin, Burr McIntosh, Tempe Pigot and Ruth Cherrington.

Arthur Hoyt, Charles Delaney, Aileen Manning, Joan Standing and George Pearce have been cast in support of Laura La Plante in "Home, James." Laura is vacationing, having finished Mary Roberts Rhinehart's "Finders Keepers."

George Sidney, noted stage and screen star, has just been signed for the featured lead in "We Americans," by Carl Laemmle, Jr., who is supervising this Edward Sloman production. John Boles, another legitimate player, has also been added to the cast.

Broadway-Produced Shows Will Appear On Howard's Stage

Feature for Anniversary Week Will Be Beautiful "Orange Blossoms."

In keeping with the Howard's announced plan, an outstanding program has been arranged for the Howard Anniversary week, starting tomorrow.

On the stage "Orange Blossoms," devised and staged by Frank Cambria, will be presented. This is a New York-produced show, and comes direct from the famous Paramount theater on Broadway. Howard patrons can anticipate something new and entirely different in "Orange Blossoms."

Dorothy Neville, prima donna, has won fame because of her voice and personality. She has appearel in Earl Carroll's "Vanities" and in "Greenwich Village Follies."

Eugene Cibelli, leading tenor of the company, is a Neapolitan street singer. These songs are unlike any other type of music and there is a traditional style to the Neapolitan street singer which is unique and captivating.

By signing Dorthy Neville to a Publix contract, Frank Cambria scored another 10-point strike so far as bringing leading Broadway stars to the Publix theaters is concerned.

At the age of 9 Dorothy sang before royalty at Buckingham palace. Following a long term of study in France and Italy she came to this country with her parents and achieved such success on the west coast that she came east and continued her vocal studies, meanwhile filling an engagement with the Chicago Grand Opera company. A concert tour followed and it was while on this tour that Miss Neville attracted the attention of Broadway producers, eventually leaping to fame as one of the stars in the Greenwich Village Follies.

Two young coal miners of yesteryear, Earl and Bell, or to give them their real names, Earl Williams and Francis La Bella, scored a sensational triumph on Broadway as guitar players. They first strummed their way into the hearts of the theater-going public in Ed Wynn's "Grab Bag." Since that time they have been recognized as one of the most talented and popular teams on the American musical comedy stage.

Dezso Retter, whose tumbling act is provocative of roars of laughter at every performance, is a product of the European music halls. Just before signing to appear in "Orange Blossoms" he had returned from a triumphant tour of the leading capitals of Europe. Retter, a Hungarian by birth, first visited the United States in 1906 and proved such a sensation in vaudeville that he was signed to appeared on the musical comedy stage. He has been a principal in many leading Broadway musical shows, including "Artists and Models," "The Passing Show" at the Winter Garden, "Gay Paree," "Passions of 1926" and scores of other big successes.

Cattle were first brought to this country by the Spanish adventurers in the sixteenth century.

Weirdness Rife In Lon Chaney Film at Loew's

Chills of creeping horrors linked with moments of the tensest drama will be brought by Lon Chaney, "the man of a thousand faces," in his great success, "London After Midnight," a Tod Browning production, which will be presented at Loew's Grand theater this week. Uncanny, creepy and weirdly mysterious, the new picture shows the great master screen actor at his best.

Fantastic shadows, weird apparitions, and the gruesome denizens of the great beyond—these are the background for one of the strangest roles an actor has ever been called upon to play—Lon Chaney's part in "London After Midnight."

Ghosts and the grim things known as vampires, or the "un-dead"—corpses that desert their graves at night to prey upon the living, and other eldritch beings of Europe's many superstitions come to life and being in a strange phantasmagoria of horror—creepy, supernatural details to a story that, in its real analysis, sticks to scientific fact. Tod Browning, the author and also the director, has worked the wildly improbable into latter-day fact so skilfully that one almost believes, against his own reason, that such things do exist.

But outside all this—it is one of the greatest screen entertainments Chaney has ever given the silent drama.

"The man of a thousand faces" plays a Scotland Yard detective, detailed to ferret out a strange plot cloaked behind the shadows of a haunted English manor house. A student of hypnotism and other modern sciences, he pits this strange art against the grim spectres and other superstitious beliefs; and solves a mystery that, when the supernatural is explained away, is a very remarkable scientific exposition of the craft of the modern investigator of crime. It is the last word in detective stories.

As the detective, assuming strange disguises and working a strange hypnotic spell as a scientific aid to detection, Chaney has a role that keeps the audience in breathless suspense until the amazing solution at the close of the picture. Marceline Day makes a very charming heroine, and Conrad Nagel a romantic lover for her, while Henry B. Walthall does a splendid bit of character acting as Sir James, about whom the plot revolves. Howard Observes 7th Anniversary In Current Week

The Howard theater is seven years old this week. Some kind friend has said that the Howard is more than a theater—that it is an institution. The Howard management and service staff are happy this week and thankful for their many friends.

The Howard theater has endeavored to be a good influence in Atlanta and Georgia. Boasting doesn't become an institution such as the Howard theater. But there is a difference between boasting and pride. The Howard takes pride in the fact that whatsoever measure of success it has had and will continue to have is clean success.

The Howard has brought to its stage such screen and stage celebrities as Gilda Gray, Gertrude Ederle, Fay Lamphier, Colleen Moore and Clara Kimball Young.

Most Atlantans know the history of the Howard theater. Before becoming "one of the Publix theaters" it was the leading theater of the Southern Enterprise chain, headed by S. A. Lynch, with theaters throughout the South. Famous Players, now called Paramount - Famous - Lasky, Inc., bought out Southern Enterprise, and the "home office," together with a number of officials and lesser lights of the organization, was transferred to New York in 1923.

Maintained High Standard.

With the wealth of Famous Players and Publix supporting it, the Howard has consistently maintained the very highest standard of entertainment values both on its screen and on its stage.

The Howard is pleased to announce that for its anniversary week program it has secured two outstanding attractions. On the screen "Sorrell & Son," Herbert Brenon's production of Warwick Deeping's best-selling novel, will be shown. Father and son love is the theme of the story, rather than brother love as was the case with "Beau Geste," Mr. Brenon's most recent masterpiece.

H. B. Warner appears as Stephen Sorrell and Mickey McBan and Nils Asther, enact, respectively, the child Kit and the matured Kit Sorrell. The notable cast includes Anna Q. Nilsson, Carmel Myers, Norman Trevor, Alice Joyce, Mary Nolan and Louis Wolheim.

Filmed in England.

Much of "Sorrell & Son" was filmed in England and with the aid of the author, Warwick Deeping. All of the film, "Sorrell & Son," is faithful to the spirit and letter of Warwick Deeping's book, and the ending of the film is that of the book. Herbert Brenon is of the opinion that "Sorrell and Son" is his best motion picture. A father himself, Mr. Brenon believes the story of "Sorrell and Son" is that of any father and any son, and that the appeal of the film as entertainment is supplemented by its spiritual effect on men and women who view it.

"Orange Blossoms" is the name of the Publix stage show which will be offered this week. It is the first of the New York produced shows, coming intact from the famous Paramount theater on Broadway. Howard patrons can anticipate something new and entirely different in these New York-produced shows.

All-Star Cast Is Featured In Erlanger's 'Constant Wife'

One of the most brilliant offerings of the season will be the all-star cast that J. M. Welch will present here in Somerset Maugham's excellent drawing room play, "The Constant Wife," which will be the attraction at the Erlanger theater the current week, with matinees Wednesday and Saturday. The cast includes such stars as Lou Tellegen, for many years a warm favorite with theater-goers since the he first became prominent on our shores with the immortal Sarah Bernhardt, for it was she that first introduced this sterling French actor to us, and before he became a screen star.

Charlotte Walker, always a welcome visitor, comes each year in a new play and is remembered for her success in "Trail of the Lonesome Pine;" "Warrens of Virginia," "Call the Doctor," "On Parole," "Ten for Three," "The Crisis" and many others. Norman Hackett needs no introduction to play-goers. He is an actor of quality and started his career as a mere boy with Frederick Warde and Louis James. He has been a co-star with Miss Walker in "The Circle" and several other plays, as well as touring as star with his own company for several seasons.

Miss Emma Bunting is considered by many press critics as the leading comedienne of the American stage—the mere mention of her name in connection with any performance gives it distinction and is an assurance to play-goers that the comedy role is in good hands and that they will enjoy a delightful performance.

J. M. Welch has selected an excellent supporting company to present "The Constant Wife," which is from the pen of Somerset Maugham and is a guarantee in itself. Mr. Maugham has given to the stage such plays as "Rain," "The Circle," "The Letter" and many others.

"The Constant Wife" is considered by many who read Maugham as one of his best works as a novel—as a play the critics in New York and Philadelphia were unanimous in praising it—and the fact that it played for one solid year at the Maxine Elliott theater to the largest receipt of any dramatic offering—is the highest recommendation that a play can receive.

With such a brilliant cast of stars in a smart play by such a notable author it is indeed an event in the theater and one that cannot afford to be missed. Particular attention is called to the popular price scale which will prevail throughout the engagement. Seats for all performances may be had at the Erlanger box office and at Phillips & Crew Piano company.

Alamo No. 2.

Alamo theater No. 2 opens the week with Norma Talmadge's great success, "Graustark," the unforgetable romance of all times, which is presented as a modern play of royalty and love. In this picture Norma Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien are together again by popular demand. These stars have been seen together in many successful pictures and it was felt that O'Brien was ideally adapted to the leading male role in "Graustark."

On Tuesday Gloria Swanson will be seen in one of her greatest successes, "Her Husband's Trademark." A first-run picture, "Bertha the Sewing Machine Girl," starring Madge Bellamy, Allan Simpson and J. Farrell MacDonald, will be shown Wednesday and Thursday.

This is an epic of a girl's romance and carries you from an East Side sweat shop to a Fifth avenue mansion. Mabel Normand is the star and has excellent support in "Suzanna," which will be shown Friday only.

DAVE HARRIS REVUE HEADS GEORGIA BILL

Dave Harris, whose miniature musical comedy is one of the big features of this week's bill at Keith's Georgia theater, is a songwriter in addition to being an actor, comedian and player of sixteen musical instruments. In Dave's company are two young ladies who have been receiving a great deal of praise for their singing and dancing. Dave Harris was one of the first to introduce jazz bands to the public, from which he has evolved the idea of the "one man band" and a company of entertainers.

Tom Smith, an eccentric comedian, is making his first tour with a comedy offering that scores everywhere. Tom has talents that include marvelous dancing acrobatics, piano playing and entertaining novelties that compel the laughs.

Richard Vintcur, assisted by Kiki Tales and George Winston, offers a series of novelty surprises, handsomely set in a background that is most attractive. There are songs, dances and comedy numbers galore, all presented by past masters in the art of entertaining.

Olyn Landick has taken a leaf from Rudyard Kipling and elects to tell about women. It's a travesty and presented for laughing purposes only but it's all good amusement and gives one a new angle to the age-old subject—woman.

Florence Wright is being starred in a very artistic production by the Colonial Sextette, an organization of vocalists who present a program of unusual quality. Costumes of the period are worn and advance notices indicate that this is one of the best singing presentations now playing the circuit. Vaudeville shows alternate with feature films and the Pathe news weekly.

Musical Comedy Favorite "Irene," Current at Forsyth

The Forsyth Players, distinguished dramatic stock organization, will lapse, for the nonce, into musical comedy this week with the presentation of "Irene," perhaps the greatest and most popular musical comedy ever presented on the stage.

Consequently, Atlanta theatergoers will have an opportunity to see their favorite stock actors and actresses in musical comedy roles. And our guess is that Miss Ivy Mertons will make a perfectly enchanting "Irene" as well as will the other members of the cast be suited to their roles.

"Irene" will come somewhat in the manner of a brief vacation for both the players and audiences. The dramatic tempo maintained in stock companies will experience a change to the light airishness of musical comedy.

Ten beautiful young members of the Junior League will don the garb and raiment of chorus girls, and prove that talent of a high nature is theirs. The chorus will be composed of Misses Ann Trimble, Jeanette Bailey, Frances Floyd, Margaret MacIntyre, Edyth Coleman, Harriet Shedden, Jennie Hodgson, Edna Belle Raine, Katherine Murphy and Mrs. Preston Arkwright, Jr.

With that lineup supplementing the regular Forsyth company, which includes such favorites as Frances Woodbury, Antoinette Rochte, Walter Regan, Barton MacLane, Jack Jordon, Ailee Meehan, Ainsworth Arnold, Stanley Andrews and the others, it is definitely assured that "Irene" will be capably presented.

Monday night the entire proceeds will be donated to the Junion League, and a slightly higher price will prevail on that night only. Regular prices will hold throughout the remainder of the week. The proceeds from Monday night will be used by the Junior League in the support of their charity ward in the Eggleston Memorial Home for Children.

Big Variety Bill To Open Monday On Capitol Stage

A uniformly good and brilliant bill of vaudeville is in store for those wise ones who choose to visit the Capitol theater this week, where five unusually promising Pantages acts and a cracking good feature picture, "Silk Stockings," starring Laura LaPlante, are on the slate for patrons.

The headlining turn is an exceptionally good dance revue, if critics in other cities are to be taken as judges. The Brown-Rowers Revue is the title and it presents a beautiful and colorful 15 minutes of music, melody and beauty of human form. In dance revues, it's rare that you'll see one to even equal the Brown-Bowers Revnue.

Comedy quartets are always popular. But the most popular of them all is the Original Empire Comedy Four, who are presented on the Capitol bill second only to the Brown-Bowers act. This act is one of the few old-timers still on the stage, and it's lots better now than when it first was introduced.

Eddie Foyer is a comedian—and he's just about the keenest thing in the line of funmakers that an Atlanta stage has held. Every minute of Foyer's act is packed with humor that invites the most uproarious demonstration on the part of his audiences. Eddie has a good, snappy line of patter and chatter that is new, clever and deucedly entertaining.

Knox and Steison—"The High Hatters"—also present comedy as their opus. The title of this act, perhaps, is the only thing necessary to indicate that audiences may expect the finest in comedy from these two clever chaps.

Karl and Erna Gress will present a novelty act, "A Painting Surprise," which is slated to be just that.

"Silk Stockings" is a gay, frivolous farce of the type which has brought stardom to Laura LaPlante, one of the most beautiful of the screen blondes. Otis Harlan and William Austin head the supporting cast, and the film story was taken from "a Pair of Silk Stockings," stage farce by Wesley Ruggles.

ADULTS, ONLY, TO SEE 'MOTHERHOOD,' RIALTO

"Motherhood," a unique motion picture which is being road-showed all over the country with conspicuous success, is the featured attraction for the Rialto theater this week. It will be shown all week, along with other numbers of the usual Rialto quality, according to Manager W. T. Murray, of the Rialto.

R. M. Savini, for many years a popular figure along Atlantas' film row, is a delightful and thrilling tale soring the showing at the Rialto. A private showing of "Motherhood" was given by Mr. Savini at the Rialto last Thursday, at which leaders of Atlanta's civic organizations and women's clubs, officials of the city department of health, and representatives of the press, lent their indorsement and enthusiastic praise to the picture, which was produced with the full cooperation of leading members of the medical profession and the Knickerbocker, Bellevue and allied hospitals in New York city.

While the picture is absolutely true to life because of the supervision of medical experts, it has an engrossingly charming story of the experiences of two women of different social strata in "life's greatest adventure."

"Motherhood" is a picture for adult intelligence and for the instruction and entertainment of adult minds, and children under 16 years of age will not be permitted to see it, Manager Murray announced.

The subject is presented in a sensible, dignified, straightforward manner and no objection has ever been raised against the picture, according to Mr. Savini.

SHOSELL'S SEXTETTE FEATURES LOEW BILL

Five Varied Vaudeville Acts on This Week's Program.

Two of vaudeville's foremost comedy feature acts will appear as headline attractions on the new bill of vaudeville at Loew's Grand theater this week under the "Big Attractions" policy and the supporting bill itself will contain other turns that have starred for years as headline attractions in leading vaudeville theaters of the country. The bill, as a whole, gives promise of being one of the greatest shows seen in Atlanta in many months.

First of the headline attractions is the sterling team of Lew and Madeline Wilson, both stars of the first water, who will appear in a comedy riot entitled, "Nothing In the Mouth." This is a big novelty act in which the two principals offer some fast comedy, do some neat musical turns and offer some marvelous whistling as extra bits. They use accordions and other instruments and provide a program of fun and music that is of the highest rank.

Next on the bill will be the big combination act known as Lew Wilson and His Gang, presented by a big company of 10 people in which Lew and Madeline Wilson appear in entirely different roles and which will also feature the work of Al Shosell's famous sextette, a comedy band. There are three pretty girls and seven musicians in this act to back to two famous stars.

Another feature of the headline class will be that of Wally Sharples and company entitled "Smile Awhile." This act was produced for fun purposes only and in the cast besides Wally Sharples are the Whitney sisters, Harry Lang, Jack Hughes, Marie Merriet and Marie Barbiere. This is a fast comedy turn with a whirlwind dancing finish.

Harry and Dennis DuFor, a wonderful team of dancers, will bring a new novelty turn which is rated as "Just a Step From Paris, London and Berlin." This act is crowded with novel features and late song and dance hits.

The opening attraction will be the pretty aerial and acrobatic creation of the Howard Sisters, two of the most graceful performers on the vaudeville stage.

Along with this big feature vaudeville show will be presented "London After Midnight," with the great star, Lon Chaney, in the leading role.

Ziegfeld Follies Booked 3 Days On Erlanger Stage

The long-awaited visit of the farfamed Ziegfeld Follies is now announced for the Erlanger theater, for a special engagement of three days, commencing Monday evening, December 19, with matinee Wednesday. Word has already reached Atlanta, from other cities so far visited this season, of the great success that has attended the celebrated Ziegfeld revue, on tour—this success seemingly being as conspicuous in an artistic as well as a financial way.

Brilliant names have always been identified with the Ziegfeld Follies, and for the current edition, which is by actual count the 20th of the long series, no less stars than Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn, were engaged at a joint salary said to be one of the largest yet paid to any stage stars, possibly from the fact that they have succeeded in commanding a large public of their own during the past four or five years.

With them will come their entire ensemble of Denishawn dancers, who accompanied the stars on their recent 18-months' tour of the Orient, from whence they have brought back many exotic stage trappings, as well as a new series of Hindu, Javanese and Japanese dances.

The follies boasts also a very large ensemble of "glorified girls," including "Miss Tulsa 1927," (who in private life is Miss Virginia Howard), as well as her twin sister. These figurantes seem to have attracted much attention throughout the Follies' tour, and no less attention has been paid to the "New Rhythm" ballet.

The scenes are by Joseph Urban, who also designed the new Ziegfeld theater in New York, where "Rio Rita" is now current. New and enchanting tableaux, by Andre Monteux, form a feature of the stage decor, while the costumes are mostly imported from Paris. A special touring orchestra is carried, under the leadership of George Dillworth.

Mail orders will be accepted and filled in the order of their receipt and the public seat sale will open Thursday morning, December 15, at the Erlanger box office and at Phillips & Crew Piano company.

SECOND WHITE FROLIC SLATED FRIDAY NIGHT

With the thunderous applause of Broadway still ringing in their ears, Clarence E. Muse and his big Charleston steppers will feature a big midnight frolic Friday night at the 81 theater, being the second of the season staged by Manager Tom Bailey of that house.

This company with a large cast of 40 performers is slated to be one of the biggest hits of this or any other season of midnight frolics for white people only at the 81 theater. An entire carload of scenery and a chorus of 16 bronzed steppers make this show one of the finest on the entire colored stage.

Clarence E. Muse, himself, is one of the most famous colored performers in the country. On Broadway he has scored tremendous success with his impersonation of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde he being the only colored impersonator of the famous stage and fictitional characters. He owns "Charleston Steppers" and is producing it here, and he will give his Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde number in addition to the other big numbers of the show.

A large and extremely talented jazz band is another feature of the show which is slated to strike the spot with midnight frolic patrons. Tickets for the Friday night show will be priced at 75 cents and $1 and may be obtained at the theater only.

At the Smaller Theaters

Before the CURTAIN

By ELMO HAMBY

When Herbert Brenon produced "Beau Geste," Paramount's rivals heaved a great sigh of relief and said, "Well, thank goodness, that's over. Brenon can never produce another of that type and get away with it," the "getting away with it" meaning, of course, the producing of financial joy at the box office.

Whether or not they were right is to be proven this week at the Howard theater, where "Sorrell and Son" will be on view. As far as excellence from a critic's standpoint is concerned, a preview sufficiently satisfied both your correspondent and the eminent Mr. Woodruff that "Sorrell and Son" is another "Beau Geste."

But, unfortunately, critics' stamps of approval do not spell success at the box-office, and for that reason "Sorrell and Son" must remain an unproven quantity until some time next Saturday evening when Assistant Manager Edwin Adler counts the last dime.

Brenon startled all screen convention by producing "Beau Geste," a movie with scarcely a female in it. It was a mighty epic of brother-love and "Sorrell and Son" is an equally mighty epic of love between father and son.

There are women in it, of course. But nearly all have antagonistic roles. And a woman as a menace is the most unwomanly sight in all creation.

"Sorrell and Son" has no thundering plot action. It is a beautiful and tranquil telling of a story that might have been taken from the pages of an old family album. But its climax is one of the most powerful things the screen has ever held.

If you appreciate the finer element of the cinema, then your correspondent knows of no better picture to recommend than "Sorrell and Son."

"The Constant Wife."

Crowded into the same week with "Sorrel and Son" is "The Constant Wife," presenting one of the most brilliant casts seen in Atlanta in many years, at the Erlanger, and the presentation of the tried-and-true "Irene" by the Forsyth Players at the Forsyth theater.

The old-timers who scorn the present-day drama, tell of the by-gone days when the greatest stars of all theaterdom could be seen weekly at the Bijou, at the Grand and other prominent theaters of the era.

But with the coming of high salaries, and the surge of a million people to New York, the real stars deleted their "provincial tours" to take long runs on Broadway, and consequently Atlanta, as other cities removed from New York, became a tank town for ham actors in fourth-rate road shows to play.

Conditions have moderated in the last few years. Most of the stars the old-timers knew have answered the last curtain call, but a group of new and equally brilliant stage luminaries has sprung up. From time to time, one, or possibly two, stars would stray down this far.

But this week in "The Constant Wife" at the Erlanger, a play yet popular on Broadway, Manager Hasse offers a no less imposing array of stars than one incorporating such names as Lou Tellegen, Norman Hackett, Charlotte Walker and Emma Bunting.

Such names as that gracing one production present an invitaiton that can only be answered by your presence at the Erlanger at least once during the week.

Ponce de Leon To Show Great Screen Classic, "Quo Vadis," Thursday

A gigantic production of "Quo Vadis" is to be shown at the Ponce de Leon theater next Thursday and Friday.

For stupendous size, both in cast and scenes; for super-thrills and for rare beauty of photography, this film version of the Sienklewicz classic is proclaimed an unequaled masterpiece of screen artistry.

Emil Jannings, noted for his work in "Passion," heads the cast, which is said to number more than 20,000 men, women and children.

The scenes, staged in Rome on the actual site of Nero's tyrannies, are enormous.

The historic debaucheries of Nero and his court and the terrible cruelties of the despot, as vividly pictured, are tempered by the tender love of the pagan Vinicius for the beautiful Christian girl, Lygia, and the unyielding faith of the followers of Peter, the apostle, even when burned at the stake and thrown to the lions in the arena of the circus.

Jannings, as Nero, has given an even more impressive characterization than was his in "Passion." Nero was cruel, lustful, bloodthirsty, always. Yet he was inordinately vain, foppish, childish in his self-admiration. It was thus that Jannings has portrayed him. Nero, dead 1,900 years, lives again—on the screen.

If you want to see some real riding, don't miss Wally Wales, in "The Hurricane Horseman," at the Alamo No. 1 theater Monday and Tuesday. Wally's brother was falsely accused of killing the cashier in the bank, and to save his name he seeks the real murderer. After finding him he has to do some riding and fighting that would surprise you.

The "Two-Fisted Buckaroo" Wednesday, is a story of a pretty girl and a brave cowboy fighting through dangers to love and happiness. Ken Maynard in "The Overland Stage" will be shown Friday and Saturday. It is a drama of the days when every mile westward meant fight—fight—fight—and to the bravest man went the fairest. It is just a rip-roaring thriller of the golden west where horsemen are horsemen and lovers are lovers, and Ken Maynard is king of them all.

Ponce de Leon.

Beautiful and blond Laura LaPlante is the star of "The Love Thrill" which opens a brilliant program of screen features at the Ponce De Leon theater the current week. "The Love Thrill" is considered the finest thing that this talented young star has ever done and those who admire Miss LaPlante and who like real entertainment will find "The Love Thrill" to be the zenith of screen entertainment.

Jack Mulhall and Dorothy MacKaill are the featured stars in "See You in Jail," which will be featured on Tuesday only. This is an absolutely side-splitting comedy which no one can afford to miss.

Lois Wilson and George K. Arthur form the comedy pair in "The Gingham Girl," picturization of the famous New York stage play which ran for a sensational length of time on Broadway, and which will be seen in its film form at the Ponce De Leon on Wednesday only.

The mighty masterpiece of the screen and of fiction, "Quo Vadis" will be offered the Ponce De Leon patrons on Thursday and Friday of this week. There are few stories that can equal in sheer drama, the masterfulness of "Quo Vadis."

Tom Mix, famous western luminary, will be seen in "The Broncho Twister" at the Ponce De Leon on Saturday.

Tudor.

The great epic of the winning of the west, which seared its way across the movie heavens a year or two ago, blazing for itself a trail of glory not to vanish even in a score of years. This picture, "The Covered Wagon," which tells the story of the immortal march across uncharted plains to new homes and new life will never die.

The Tudor will show "The Covered Wagon" on Monday and Tuesday.

On Wednesday and Thursday the Tudor offers George O'Hara, one of the screen's most dynamic players, in "Yours to Command," a picture that's fast as lightning and very entertaining.

Hoot Gibson, whose smiling countenance has been missed from the Tudor's screen for quite some time, makes another bow in his latest, "Galloping Fury," the story of which comes from the pen of a no less notable than Peter B. Kyne, and which is a delightful and thrilling tale of the west and gives the star plenty of opportunities to display his unique ability as a horseman, actor and fighter.

Palace.

The thrilling drama of the metropolis, "Underworld," a gripping story of the night and subterranean life of the world's greatest city, New York, will open the week at the Palace theater, Inman Park, for a run of Monday and Tuesday. George Bancroft, Clive Brook and Evelyn Brent are starred in this extraordinary picture.

Adolphe Menjou, suave and polished gentleman of the screen, is starred in "Service for Ladies," which will be featured at the Palace theater on Wednesday only. Those who like Adolphe will like "Service for Ladies" even more than those who merely like a good film.

Rod LaRocque in "Eagle of the Sea" is the feature at the Palace theater for Thursday and Friday and patrons of that house on these two days are slated to get more than their money's worth in real thrilling screen entertainment. Tom Tyler in "Tom and His Pals" is the Saturday picture.

Tenth Street.

The current program at the Tenth Street theater for this week includes many of the most outstanding pictures produced this season. Richard Dix, virile and manly, will open the week on Monday and Tuesday in "Quick Sands," one of his finest films.

Colleen Moore, peppy and scintillating young star, will be starred in "Twinkletoes," which will be shown at the Tenth Street theater on Wednesday only. "Twinkletoes" is a story of the Limehouse and London and is one of the best pictures made by the dainty Colleen.

The masterful acting of Lon Chaney, foremost of the screen's character actors, will be seen at its best on Thursday and Friday in " "Mockery," a tale of Russia when that country was red with the blood of the nobility. It is an entertaining story.

"Tarzan and the Golden Lion" will be featured on Saturday only at the Tenth Street theater.

Popularity Goes to the Warm Hearted

BY DORIS BLAKE

"It is too bad youngsters are made to suppress their emotions," said a woman who has suffered all her life from a 'cold reserve,' as she herself calls it. "You kill the most lovable trait in human beings when you do.

"I know perfectly well that if I hadn't had the tyrant aunt who brought me up on the theory that it was a crime to show your feelings under any circumstances, and especially any male circumstances, that I would have been admired less and loved a whole lot more. If the first twenty some odd years of your life have been devoted to curbing your impulses, you find it a pretty difficult thing to appear human in people's eyes afterward. That's why I'm for less and less ladylike reserve and more and more emotional display."

It would be a noisy world if there weren't some curb put upon the enthusiasms of childhood. Nevertheless there is truth in the fact that too much reserve is bad for a grownup. So many friendships are lost before they've had a chance to be made because of the Chinese wall that surrounds the person whose emotions have been trained to suppression.

Youth Needs Spontaneity.

Among the younger generation, in spite of all the freedom we are trught to believe is theirs, young women are left out of invitations to this affair and that because they have been trained to stamp out all evidence of feeling. They are afraid to give vent to their enthusiasms that they feel down underneath. It wouldn't be "ladylike." It might be mistaken for commonness.

Enthusiasm is delightful and it belongs in the category of the young woman's charms. It is time enough to take on dignity and austerity when the world has maltreated you so that you feel the need of armor.

There is no question that the young and the old and the middle aged who are dearest to us are those who thrill us to the warmth of a demonstrative personality.

We adore the youngster who comes forward without shyness, whose laugh is merry and infectious and who takes us into her confidence quickly and easily. The very old people who keep their hold on the young are those who are not afraid to show their feelings, and in between one of any generation or any age profits immeasurably who is natural, spontaneous and not afraid to express his or her feelings.

Warmly demonstrative people expand with every new friendship. Reserved folk shrivel, you might say, as they grow older unless they learn to obey their impulses.

There is a wide margin between this warmth of personality pleaded for and gushiness. Emotions spring from one's subconscious self. Gush springs from nothing. It is better, even if one is a bit primitive in her feeling, to express herself naturally than it is to kill the feeling itself by suppression. One simply cannot develop that type of personality that "warms and cheers" if one is constantly on guard that she may not do or say the right thing. I'm not arguing for any cave woman tactics should a man be presented, when I speak of primitiveness. But it is wise to give response to one's feeling, if it is a favorable one. In other words, don't crawl into a shell that he will not take the time to break open.

Coldness Fails to Impress.

You cannot draw people to you unless there is a fervor to your own feeling toward them.

If you feel all tightened up when you are presented to people the chances are nine to one that they will stiffen and pass you by for the girl who is more humanly alive. If you want to make a success of your work, no matter what its line, you have to throw yourself into it. That is what is meant by being alive where friendships are concerned. Throw yourself into them, too. Don't present a surface like the well-known advertisement that guarantees no crack.

Some authority on domestic affairs advise wives recently to forego the old formula of hiding their tears. Showing them, it was urged, would clear up many domestic squabbles in far quicker time than carrying the grievance sullenly and quietly. Tears, at least, are evidence of emotions, weak if you want to call them so, but feminine weakness is a more lovable trait than austerity, is it not?

Naturally, that is not urging one to go to the extremes of emotional hysteria in order to prove the possession of human qualities. But, at least, it is letting oneself go, which is helpful at times.

There is the danger of "hardness" being attributed to the person who has every emotion so well under control that a glow, a fervor, an enthusiasm is impossible. Go through the motions of any state of mind and heart long enough and you do run the risk of setting up that state of mind in yourself. Our cynics are self-trained; they're not born that way.

Who Loves a Blase Person?

Of recent years it has become the fashion in certain circles to appear blase. Young men and women adopt this emotional hardness because they think it carries an air of distinction from the common lot. It does, too. It distinguishes them as apart from natural normal reactions that should characterize youth toward people, play and things.

How much charm is lost such young people they never realize or they would be sparkling, vibrant and gay, and by these latter qualities attract many more people to them. A blase manner is forbidding in an older person. In youth, it is repellant because it is so peculiarly foreign to tender years.

If one wants to charm people and would like the formula upon which to act to be the simplest and most direct in results, accept this one on the belief that it never fails:

Respond with warmth. Cultivate a responsive interest in people and things. Enjoy people. Enjoy things. If you leave people cold it is because your own manner is unresponsive. You have to meet people a little bit more than halfway to impress them with the friendliness of your spirit. You have to go out of your way to be nice to them. But of all the paying moves a girl can make where popularity is concerned, it is to get the reputation of being a warm hearted individual. Nothing so surely attracts and holds people.

Everybody is a little lonely, a little shy at times, a little self-conscious, and that is why the spontaneous, open hearted person wins so easily over the undemonstrative, the stand offish, the proud, or the arrogant.

PLAYS ON HEALTH IN PRIZE CONTEST

Prizes will be awarded by the Atlanta Tuberculosis association for the three best 30-minute playlets dealing with health subjects submitted by classes or groups of students in junior or senior high schools, or private and parochial schools of the same grade, in Fulton and DeKalb counties, it was announced by the association Saturday. The play contest was approved by the board of directors of the association as part of the educational program.

Rules of the contest specify that the plays submitted must deal with some aspect of individual or community health and hygiene; must be produced before an audience, to run not more than 30 minutes; must represent the combined efforts of a class or group of students, and must be submitted in writing to the Atlanta Tuberculosis association, 35 Cain street, N. E., not later than April 1, 1928.

The contest is not intended for individual students, the plays to be the result of combined efforts by classes or groups. Judgment of the plays, by manuscript only, will be based upon their dramatic value, power in carrying a health message and originality.

The prices offered are: Fifty dollars, first prize, given by the public health division of the Federated Women's Clubs of the Fifth Congressional District; $25, second prize, and $10, third prize, both underwritten by the tuberculosis association.

The three prize-winning plays will be submitted in the national contest sponsored by the National Tuberculosis association.

Atlanta schools have been successful in this national contest in past years, O'Keefe Junior High winning honorable mention and a $10 prize in 1925, while Girls' High won second prize of $50 in 1926.

URBAN LEAGUE WEEKLY BULLETIN

Rev. C. N. Perry, pastor of Liberty Baptist church, will be the speaker this afternoon at 4 o'clock at the Y. M. C. A. He will speak from the subject, "The Unfinished Task of Christianity." Rev. Perry is a product of Morehouse college, a young man who has made substantial progress in the service of the Baptist church as an active pastor. From substantial sources he is credited as doing a satisfactory and acceptable piece of religious work in connection with his present pastorate. Willie Moses will be the violin soloist. The congregational singing will be directed by the music committee.

Rev. W. J. Faulkner, pastor of the First Congregational church, will be the speaker at the Christmas service to be held at the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon, December 18, 1927, at 4 o'clock. This meeting promises to be a unique celebration of this great Christian epoch in Christendom. The special music will be arranged by the music committee. No services will be conducted at the Y. M. C. A. on Christmas Sunday, in view of the fact that the many churches will be conducting Christmas services through their religious education departments; and, too, it will be a day when most people will enjoy the fireside circle with their friends and kiddies.

The Henry McNeal lodge of Elks holds its annual anniversary exercises this afternoon at 3 o'clock in the auditorium of Big Bethel A. M. E. church. The principal speakers for the occasion will be Dr. W. G. Alexander, dean of the theological seminary of Morris Brown university, and Dr. H. R. Butler. The full chorus of Morris Brown university will have a prominent part on the program. A feature of the occasion will be eulogizing of the members who have passed away during the year. The executive ruler of the McNeal lodge, R. E. Pharrow, senior trustee of the Elks, will be master of ceremonies of this occasion. The reputation of the speaker, together with the standing of this fraternity in the community, guarantees a large appreciative attendance on this anniversary.

Eugene Kinckle Jones, executive secretary, National Urban league, was tendered an informal reception Thursday night at 8 o'clock at the Y. M. C. A. by the colored citizens of Atlanta. Approximately 100 leading business and professional men were present. The executive secretary left on the midnight train for Tallahassee and other points in Florida. Field Secretary Jesse O. Thomas accompanied him on his trip.

Baby Health Centers.

Baby health centers for the week will be held at Stewart avenue nursery on Monday, Luckie Street school on Tuesday, Fair Street school on Wednesday, Andrew Stewart nursery on Thursday, and Kirkwood school on Friday, according to an announcement by Dr. J. P. Kennedy, city health officer. The centers will open each afternoon at 1:30 o'clock with trained nurses in charge.

BOOK REVIEWS IN TABLOID

A STRIKING CHILD'S BOOK.

A recent importation from Czecho-Slovakia should prove of interest to all who are concerned in the religious education of children. It is "A Child's Book of Hymns and Carols," being the words and music of sixteen of the best known hymns and carols with eight colored illustrations.

The book was published in Prague by V. Neubert a Syno.ie and the book covers and the first illustrations are by the well-known child's artist, Maria Fischer Kvechova. Further interest, however, lies in the fact that the seven other illustrations are by a young American, Judith Wragg, of Columbus, Ga., and also that the book was compiled by Margaret G. Weed, of Jacksonville, Fla., a daughter of the late Episcopal Bishop Weed, of that state.

"The idea is not mine," said Miss Weed. "So many mothers asked me why there were no hymnals with pictures for children as all the other song books had pictures and they liked them so much better. Then I saw a hymnal which the late Mrs. James Bancroft had made for her little children, and it was from this that the book grew. I have had the book printed on tough paper with flexible backs so that the children can handle them easily. I did not want a book so beautiful that it must be 'kept nice' and only looked at carefully. I wanted a book which they could use constantly and love to sing from."

Through the courtesy of the general distributor, Raf. D. Szalatnay, liberal discounts can be given churches and church organizations, either for their own use or for resale. It is especially felt that in Sunday school kindergartens and first grades as well as personal Christmas gifts these books will fill a long felt need.

HISTORIC SEA CHEST

AN HISTORIC SEA CHEST.

Commodore John Rodgers owned this little green chest and used it at sea while he was fighting the Barbary pirates and the British navy in the war of 1812. Now it belongs to his great-granddaughter, Cornelia Meigs, author of the $2,000 prize story for boys and girls, "The Trade Wind," published by Little, Brown & Co. Miss Meigs keeps her manuscripts in it. Perhaps her niece and nephew are hunting for another story or gifts for Christmas.

During the entire period of the world war Cornelia Meigs managed the women's production work for the Red Cross in her home city, Keokuk, Iowa. She ordered the material in wholesale quantities and coordinated lots, and planned the production of the plant according to the daily demand of the war department and the National Red Cross. She supervised the cutting tables and the machines and assigned her workers to their several jobs. She was her own supply department, operating chief, and director of personnel.

Miss Meigs comes from a line of distinguished ancestors. On her mother's side she is a great-granddaughter of Commodore John Rodgers of the famous frigate Constitution. Her father's family boasts officers in the Revolutionary war, professors, famous doctors and engineers. Now Cornelia Meigs adds authorship to the long list of family accomplishments, having won the $2,000 prize for the best boys and girls' story.

ANOTHER POLLYANNA BOOK.

Pollyanna's Debt of Honor. By Harriet Lummis Smith. Among all the stories that have been written for girls during the past 10 years, and of the many lovable heroines that different authors have created, none has been as popular as "Pollyanna," the little Glad Girl. In a short while after the publication of the first Glad Book, by Eleanor H. Porter, the lovely and beloved author, the name of Pollyanna became a household word for all the school children began playing the Glad Game and everybody was happier for adopting the little girl's optimistic spirit of trying not only to be happy, but to make somebody else happy, too.

And then the world became sad and Pollyanna was lonely, for the beautiful author, who had tried to make others happier and more contented through her writings, had laid aside her pen, but after awhile, Harriet Lummis Smith was selected to carry on the Glad Game.

It was perfectly natural that Pollyanna should grow up and that as a young lady she would be loved by many, so Mrs. Smith tells about "Pollyanna of the Orange Blossoms," the third Glad Story, in which the bride was beautiful and the groom handsome and everybody was happy. The fourth Glad Book, which was written several years later, entitled "Pollyanna's Jewels," was another beautiful story with Pollyanna still the central figure, and now "Pollyana's Debt of Honor" arrives in time to become one of the popular books for Christmas. The front cover carries a most attractive picture of the girl whose beautiful story has given so much pleasure for the past few years. It is the fifth Glad Book. (L. C. Page & Co., Boston; $2.00.)

SELECT BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

A Girl from China (Soumay Tcheng) By B. Van Vorst, author of "A Popular History of France." This is the personal record of a Chinese girl who shared in the revolts of young China as it began to plead and plan for more freedom. (Frederick Stokes Co., New York.)

Sue Stanwood. By Lillian Grace Copp, with illustrations by William C. McNully. Now what could be more charming and interesting than a fairy story about a little orphan girl who lived in a Maine village and who by one wave of the magic wand was transplanted to the attractive home of an unknown aunt in the suburb of Boston? She was at once placed in a girls' college.

Sue had longed to do things, so she became quite an active participant in everything connected with the girls' college, but in the end she played most successfully the roles of Santa Claus and Cupid. (L. C. Page Co., Boston.)

Barbara Winthrop, Graduate. Author of Barbara Winthrop, At Boarding School, At Camp, etc. By Helen Katherine Broughall. The illustrations are by Elizabeth R. Withington. The college girls who have been keeping up with Barbara have been having a good time—this every girl knows. Barbara, with her chums, Peggy and Jo, find every day so full of things that they are kept busy. There may be a mystery or two, a little tragedy, but the happiness of Youth can always overcome such little things. (L. C. Page Co., Boston.)

Soapsuds' Last Year. By Ethel Comstock Bridgman. An interesting story of a group of young American girls, all seniors, at boarding school, among the old girls being Frances Gardner, Sophia Sudman (lovingly called Soapsuds), Miriam Westley and a number of others—also a junior or two and a sprinkle of a few others were included in the four classes.

At the opening of Miss Austin's school in Connecticut there were 35 new girls. Soapsuds was a leader among the old crowd—a fine set of girls possessing a splendid democratic spirit, loyalty and ready to play the game at any time. The old girls were real girls, which the new girls soon realized and all joined in the pleasures together.

There are many lessons girls of impressionable ages cannot help but absorb in the modern boarding school—they usually leave with a heart full of love and loyalty to humanity. (The Century Co., New York.)

BOOKS FOR BOYS.

For the Glory of France. A story for every boy. By Everett McNeill, who tells a most interesting story of the adventure with Champlain in the New World. Illustrations. This is a historical story of the son of Huguenot, the greatest swordsman of France, who was a stowaway on Champlain's boat in his eagerness to come to the New World.

It is a splendidly-written story of how Champlain and those boys who helped him in the founding of Quebec and in the discovery of Lake Champlain. This is a Dutton book.

Days and Deeds of '76. By Everett T. Tomlinson, author of "The Pioneers." The author tells of the exciting adventures and desperate struggles of the American revolution. He has dug out much valuable material which he found in old diaries, newspapers and here and there. He tells stories of the revolution that has been overlooked by other writers and which are filled with much interesting data of those thrilling days. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

The Cub Arrives. By Paul L. Anderson. This is not the story of a baby bear, but of one boy who did not make the right start at school and who soon finds himself unpopular with both teachers and schoolmates.

Then he was not a strong, healthy, boy and perhaps had been indulged too much at home, but, anyway, he found it mighty hard to be even civil to the boys, so they nicknamed him "Cub" and "Lily." During the next summer, however, he goes on a camping trip with some older boys, who teach him how to swim, box, canoe and play the game. So when he returned to school in the fall he was no longer "Cub," but "Bat" for "Battling Kid," and later he became one of the most popular boys in the school.

Cameron MacBain. By Harold M. Sherman and Hawthorne Daniel. The author has woven his story around a backwoods boy who was forced out into the world and who had spent his life hunting, fishing and trapping in the farthest away post of the Hudson Bay company. So when, to his amazement, he was made acquainted with the railroads, telephones, elevators and the radio he felt that the world and its people were all too big for him. His journey from the North Woods to his new place is full of exciting adventures. "Appleton's Book.)

After You, Magellan! By James Farquarson Leys, Jr., with attractive illustrations. All boys will want to read this story of a young man just out of college—an "adventurer at heart" he is called, for he could not settle down to any one thing, but wanted to travel and learn through experience the ways of the world.

This is the story of how he traveled as a deck boy to Seattle, and next through a stroke of luck he finds himself on a passenger liner for Hongkong, where he has any number of adventures—and from there he goes to Singapore, where the adventures continue.

Mr. Leys uses all the color of the different parts of the world and the out-of-way corners. Every description is through the eyes of a vagabond traveler. Any boy or girl who likes books of travel told in a personal way will enjoy this. (Century's Book. $4.)

Trail-Blazers of the Sky or Across to Paris and Back. By John Prentice Langley. This is the first book of a series called "The Aviation Series." At the present time there is no other subject in the world of as much importance as aviation. The author is an authority on flying and he has written this book to further the interest in flying and to tell young America all about its thrills.

Amos Green and his friend, Dan Cooper, are two daring young Americans and the big times they had flying will make every boy want to learn this sport. (Barse & Hopkins, New York.)

Go-Getter Gary. By Robert Ames Bennet. From the title the reader will know that it is a story all mixed up with cowboys, cow punchers, the prairie, shooting, Indians, etc. It is so full of lightning that you do not have time to find a dull moment. It is by the author of the "Two-Gun Man." (McClurg Co., Chicago.)

On the Trail of Chief Joseph. By Frank C. Robertson. A thrilling story of pioneer days in the northwest of which two pioneer scouts are the leading figures during the greatest Indian uprising ever known in this country.

Young David Johnson and his friend, old pioneer Leander, have many advantures during their search for a lost gold mine. The book is filled with excitement from the first to the last page. (Appleton's Book.)

Rowdy. By Robert Joseph Diven. All boys are interested in a real story about a real dog, and that is what you will find "Rowdy" to be. His home is in Alaska, where they have many intelligent and loyal dogs.

The story of "Rowdy" from the time he is a year old on until he is old enough to follow the forest trails will keep any boy out of mischief, for a while at least. (The Century company, New York.)

Tam of the Fire Cave. By Howard D. Garis, creator of "Uncle Wiggily." This is an old, old story—it goes away back to the beginning of man. The author knew all boys would like to read the story of Tam, a little cripple boy who is unable to go hunting with the men of his tribe. So he stays at home in what was called the Fire Cave of the Magicians. And in many ways he becomes just as helpful as if he had gone out to fight with the fighters of the ancient days. (D. Appleton company, New York.)

The Making of Peter Cray. By William Heyliger. There are two things about this book that will appeal to boys—one is the author who knows boys so well and who always writes so interestingly for them, and the other is that the story this time is about a young cub reporter and the life and adventures of newspaper work—this is a work that all boys want to know something about, at some time.

How Peter Cray develops into a first-class reporter after many hard trials is one of the best stories Mr. Heyliger has written. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

The Story of Vasco Da Gama. By Sarah Ware Bassett. All boys are taught that Columbus was the first and the biggest explorer in Spain's list, but that there were others who added a few thrills to the making of the country, among them being Da Gama.

The author tells the story of an explorer of Portugal who was widely known. There seemed to be a jealousy between Spain and Portugal, which will be of interest, for it is the story of historic events. There's a map in the front of the book of Da Gama's first voyage—1497-1499. (Penn Publishing company, Philadelphia.)

In the Ranks of Old Hickory. By Edward L. Sabin. With colored frontispiece and three black-and-white drawings. The title alone will convince the boy that he has a fine story to read, for the historic figure around which it is woven being Old Hickory—a red-haired Irishman, who was a real fighter, but who always fought for "a clean victory or a clean defeat." And for this reason no general was ever loved more dearly, and they all decided that he was the only man for the leader in 1812 when the Creek Indian war began.

This handsome book belongs to "The American Trail Blazers" series and will please any boy. The illustrations are by Frank Eltonhead. There are two maps to add to the information and the study of the conditions at that time. (Lippincott's Book, Philadelphia.)

Across the Seven Seas. By E. Keble Chatterton, with four illustrations by D. Cammerota. Just think how thrilling a race across the Seven Seas would be to any boy or girl, and since it is told by one who is well known as a writer of the sea and ships is sure to be full of thrills.

It is one of the most thrilling stories of the season for boys—it tells the story of how two boys were marooned in West Indian waters where they discovered a buried treasure—this is all any healthy boy wants to know and as the author knows the sea and also boys, he will thrill them with his description of the terrors of the sea. (J. B. Lippincott company, Philadelphia.)

A Boy of the Old French—By Orison Robbins, with illustrations by W. F. Stecher. The title of the book will be encouraging to all boys for they will know that a good historical story has been contributed by the author. (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., Boston.)

Ship of Our Dreams—By Edith Ballinger Price. A tale of adventure and romance, of tall ships and African jungles, all of which tells a story full of action and full of thrills. It is woven around David Garth whose ancestors followed the sea. The author has made this one of her best tales of the sea. (Century's Book.)

Sea Legs—A story of sea adventure interwoven with an authoritative manual of small boat sailing. By Alfred F. Loomis. All boys like a good story, so when Thad Putnam and Chuck Williams, two boys from the west, arrive to spend the summer on the Atlantic coast they thought they were fortunate but when they were invited to go on a sailing cruise on the yacht Cygnet, they called it a stroke of rare luck.

The author is well known as an amateur yachtman and as having written "The Cruise of the Hippocampus." The illustrations and diagrams are by Clifford Townley who is also an expert sailor. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

Peter Had Courage—By Claude M. Fuess, author of "All for Andover," etc. If you want to read about a real boy read the story of Peter and you will get some real thrills out of it. (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., Boston.)

Outlaw Torn—By Edgar Rice Burroughs, who wrote the wonderful Tarzan stories—in fact he is the creator of Tarzan, John Carter, Barney Custer, etc. Mr. Burroughs is a famous writer and his books are among the most popular. (McClurg's Book.)

DR. DOOLITTLE'S GARDEN.
The Story of Dr. Doolittle.
The Voyages of Dr. Doolittle.
Dr. Doolittle's Postoffice.
Dr. Doolittle's Circus.
Doctor Doolittle's Zoo.
Doctor Doolittle's Caravan.
Doctor Doolittle's Garden.

The stories of Doctor Doolittle, written by Hugh Lofting, have been read by more children perhaps than any other story with the exception of Uncle Remus stories. The little folks can draw a comparison between the insects that grow in their vegetable and flower gardens and then guess what they will find in Doctor Doolittle's.

The book is full of illustrations by Mr. Lofting and like the other books, it is a story of which you do not tire. It is the best gift book you can give a little boy or girl though it is filled with just as much delightful nonsense as the original Doctor Doolittle book.

The writer of these humorous stories, Hugh Lofting, is the winner of the Newbery medal for the most distinguished contribution to American literature for children in 1922. (Frederick A. Stokes Co., New York.)

(Marshall Jones Co., Boston.)

SHAKESPEARE.

Shakespeare—Actor-Poet. As seen by his associates explained by himself and remembered by the succeeding generation. By Clara Longworth de Chambrun, Ph., D., doctor of the university of Paris. The volume was awarded the Bordin prize by the French academy, this being proof of Madame de Chambrun's scholarly qualities.

She has not only written a thrilling biography but a most critical study of the man and his writings. She has told things that have never been told, all of which is authentic, therefore quite interesting. (D. Appleton & Co., New York. Price $3.)

Man Possessed. By William Rose Benet. A New Yorker by birth, who comes of an army family his grandfather having been General Stephen Vincent Benet, at one time chief of the ordnance of the United States army.

Mr. Benet has written several books and like his brother, William Rose Benet, is considered a brilliant poet. These are selections that will meet even the approval of brother poets who like modern poetry. (George H. Doran Co., New York.)

Old Trails and Roads in Penn's Land. By John T. Faris, author of "Old Churches and Meeting Houses," Lovers of travel who have already become familiar with the author's books of travel will be glad to follow him through "Penn's Woods," on the old Indian trails and the footpaths to places of beauty that would appear to the eye of any artist. There's the beautiful rivers, the old wooden bridges, rivers and roads of lingering memories which lead to glorious historic landmarks.

Dr. Faris also entertains the reader with plenty of anecdotes of both humor and interest as you pass the beautiful Colonial homes, quaint old Bethlehem with its old Moravian burial ground and other attractive places too numerous to mention here.

This is really a most valuable book to the lover of travels by motor for it is filled with attractive facts. (Lippincott's, Philadelphia.)

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Bronze Treasury. An anthology of obscure English poets. Edith by Harry Kemp, together with their biographical portraits. This handsome book is dedicated to "Horace L. Liveright in appreciation and friendship." (Macauley's Book. $3.00.)

The Tragic Bride. The story of the Empress Alexandra of Russia. By V. Poliakoff. It is the story of Alexandra, the "tragic bride" of Nicholas II, the last emperor of Russia, who was betrothed at the bedside of her father, Alexander II, and wedded to Nicholas immediately after her father's funeral. Alexandra became at once a leading figure in Russian affairs. Illustrated. (Appleton's Book. $3.00.)

Oliver Cromwell. A character study by John Drinkwater, a young Englishman whose name is well known on both sides of the Atlantic. (Doran's Book.) His "Abraham Lincoln" and Robert E. Lee were plays that brought his name before the literary world in America.

The work of Mr. Drinkwater has placed his name prominently among the best writers of the country. So few attempts have been made to write a real study of Cromwell that this book, which is the result of much study and research work, will be warmly received.

". . . . he could never have done half that mischief without great parts of courage, industry and judgment."

Christopher Morley's "Translations From the Chinese." With most attractive illustrations by Ghyas Williams. (Doubleday, Page & Co.) In a conversation with the Chinese ambassador, Browning, asked him "What sort of poems he had chiefly written?" He replied, "My poems are mostly enigmatical." "Then," said Browning, "we are brothers."—Symonds.

Christopher Morley likes Chinese and has been classed as a real translator of the language, especially of "Po Lil Chile," etc. He says, however, his knowledge of the language has been derived from laundry slips. Some of his verses are as follows:

AN ENIGMA IN THE WOOD PILE.
An American friend of mine,
A man in a newspaper office,
Is very wealthy.

He tells me he has an income
Of 10,000 interruptions a year.

THOUGHT ON CONVERSING WITH A PROMINENT STATESMAN.
"It is all right for a man
To be absent-minded,
But his mind shouldn't overstay
Its leave of absence."

UNEASINESS.
"Sometimes when I am writing poetry
I have an uncomfortable feeling
That I am about to be Interrupted
By a flash of prose."

PESSIMISM.
"I always ask
At least three trainmen
If this is the right train for where I am going.
Even then,
I hardly believe them."

CHRISTMAS STORY.

of the most famous of children's fairy-tales has just been published in book form. Nearly fifty years ago Frank R. Stockton wrote "The Poor Count's Christmas"—that delightful story of the good giant and the tiny fairy who between them bring about a huge Christmas party for a kindly old count and his wife.

In 1881 the story was printed in St. Nicholas and inimitably illustrated by E. B. Bensell. It immediately became a favorite with story-tellers, who for many years have sought it in the bound volume of the magazine. Now it is to be found in a gay little volume with the original illustrations, published by Frederick A. Stokes company. Miss Mary Gould Davis, supervisor of story-telling in the New York public libraries, says there are none to compare with Frank Stockton's stories for children: "Among the fanciful tales of today there are none to compare with Frank Stockton's. I have put them all to the test, first and last, and I always come back to him."

CANDY CONTEST PLAN OF SEARS-ROEBUCK

Homemakers who enter the second annual candy-making contest of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation will make hundreds of boys and girls in state orphanages and training schools happy and at the same time compete for 15 prizes offered by the foundation, according to Mrs. R. F. Whelchel, home adviser, who is in charge of the project.

After the candy has been judged, the foundation will deliver it to boys and girls in institutions where Christmas enjoyment depends largely upon treats from outside sources. Each box of candy submitted to the institutions will bear the name of the contestant by whom it was entered in the contest. The department of public welfare, the Community Chest and other agencies will cooperate in selecting institutions in which the Christmas treats will be of greatest benefit.

Only professional candymakers and employees' families of Sears-Roebuck & Co. are barred from winning awards in the contest. To enter it is essential that three kinds of candy be submitted by each contestant. The candy must be wrapped in waxed paper and packed in a strong cardboard or tin box. The candy will be judged by competent disinterested home economics authorities according to a standard score card.

Each contestant will enter at least one pound of candy. The person whose candy is judged to be outstanding will receive a prize of $15. The second best will win $10 and the third, $5. The next 12 prize winners will each receive a high-grade candy thermometer.

Corn and Cotton Help Color Cars

A part of this fall's corn and cotton harvest will be used to paint American automobiles," says a bulletin of the National Geographic Society from its headquarters in Washington, D. C.: "Corn, cotton and coal derivatives, as lacquer, will also tint the kitchen chair, the tea room furniture, or change the bedroom blues to cheerful pinks and yellows.

"New lacquers for automobiles and furniture rely on two children of war, nitrocellulose and butyl alcohol. Nitrocellulose, made from cotton for high explosives, soon developed familiar peace-time articles: combs, buttons, movie film, and, since the war, has been adapted to paint. Ten years ago the middle west manufactured another war necessity from corn. Fermenting corn mash produced acetone for explosives, with butyl alcohol as a by-product. Chemists found the alcohol a good solvent for a new flowing celullose. Moreover, the solution would carry sufficient pigment and resin to make an automobile paint capable of withstanding sun rays, heat, cold, water, ice, sand, soap, weak acid, weak alcohol, oil and tar. From that moment butyl alcohol from corn became a major product and acetone a by-product.

"Thus an ancient art, painting, has become a science. Cromagnon men who drew animal pictures on walls of Spanish caves, perhaps 25,000 years ago, were the first of a long line of artists and house painters. Yet not until the last 25 years have chemists and physicists investigated paint scientifically. In this brief period they have compounded far more lasting paints; paints that will reflect more heat; paints that will banish barnacles; paints that have reduced the drying problem from days to seconds; paints that will reduce gasoline storage evaporation; synthetic, materials to substitute for fast disappearing raw materials, and non-poisonous substitutes for poisonous paints.

"The scientist's first problem was to know what paint was. Imagine a coating of red house paint magnified to the thickness of a modern sidewalk. Let us walk on it. The surface is elastic to the tread and transparent, for beneath it we see millions of red pebbles set in the hard, rubbery linseed oil cement. To prepare the paint linseed oil was mixed with red iron oxide and turpentine from southern pines. Once laid on, the turpentine rose from the paint like evaporating water from a mud flat and the linseed oil stiffened.

"The red pebbles are truly a metal. When we paint we throw over an object a protective 'coat of mail' bound in a semi-elastic cement—a red barn has a metal covering of iron rust. If we return a few years later we find that weather has taken away the top layer linseed oil cement and that the red rust pebbles are falling away like gravel from a bank beside a stream.

Paint Materials Come from Many States.

"For most of the 'makings' of paint, America need not go beyond her borders: to New Jersey, Wisconsin and Missouri mines for zinc; to Missouri again and Idaho for white lead; to Minnesota and North Dakota flax fields for linseed oil; to Pennsylvania coke ovens for coal tar dyes; to Florida sands for titanium white. We turn to Georgia pine forests for turpentine and rosin; to Chesapeake bay for menhaden fish oil; to Texas for cotton cellulose; to Illinois and Indiana for corn alcohol; to Lake Superior and Pennsylvania mines for red pigment; to Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri for barytes. Louisiana and West Virginia natural gas well provide carbon black pigment; Pennsylvania and Georgia yield yellow ochre pigment; Pennsylvania furnishes sienna and brown pigments. The waste piles of steel galvanizing industries supply Prussian blue, and farms of many localities yield soy bean oil.

"Yet the paint industry, and particularly that part of it devoted to varnish, reaches out to the ends of the earth for certain ingredients. It pays the premium of running boats down the Yangtze gorges' death traps to get water-proofing tung oil. It hires Maori natives of New Zealand to wade in swamps feeling with their toes for lumps of fossil Kauri gum exuded by trees long dead. It markets for other fossil gums or "copals" with Sierra Leone, Madagascar, Zanzibar, Benguela, Manila, Accra on the Gold coast, the Congo and even with head-hunters of New Caledonia. It buys perilla oil of Japan, soy bean oil of Manchuria, and lumbang or candle nut oil from the Philippines. America paid $11,000,000 to India last year for 31,300,000 pounds of shellac.

What the Chemist Hasn't Done.

"Great is the chemist. Yet a few materials and methods in the changing paint industry resist him. White lead, a basic paint material, still is made largely by the 'Old Dutch' process recorded in Greek annals of 300 B. C. And not in any test tube has the chemist been able to duplicate what a Georgia pine does to turpentine in a tree trunk. He has tamed many oils, but the paint industry has resolved to encourage the growth of tung nut trees in Florida because a varnish oil with tung's virtues has not been developed in the laboratory.

"Three new victories he has to his credit. Rosin from southern forests he esterizes to permit its use in place of the expensive imported fossil resin. Secondly, he has produced shellac artificially and this accomplishment may obliterate the lac gathering industry of India just as the creation of chemical blue reduced indigo farms in India and the United States. And lastly he has extracted from the corn cobs that have given their grains to make paint, furfural, to remove that paint!"

MRS. GRAYSON DEFERS OLD ORCHARD FLIGHT

Curtiss Field, N. Y., December 10. (AP)—Mrs. Frances W. Grayson, who was scheduled to fly today to Old Orchard, Maine, before hopping off for Sweden, postponed her trip. She plans to fly to Old Orchard within the next two or three days.

ALASKA DEMOCRATS GIVE BACKING TO AL

Valdez, Alaska, December 10.—(AP) Democrats of the third judicial division of Alaska, in convention here, have unanimously endorsed Governor Al Smith, of New York, as their choice for president. There are four judicial divisions in the territory.

Watches date back to early in the 16th century, for in 1511 an account of Peter Henlein says that "out of a little iron he constructs clocks with numerous wheels which, without any impulse and in any position, indicate time for forty hours and strike, and which can be carried in the purse as well as in the pocket."

"The best brakes ever developed for a motor car"

are on the Reo Flying Cloud—Try them out

"Every automobile manufacturer and every automobile engineer . . . who has subjected Lockheed Internal Hydraulic Four-Wheel Brakes to the most severe competitive tests, acclaims them the best brakes ever developed for a motor car."

THE HYDRAULIC BRAKE CO.
Automobile Topics, October 1, 1927.

The Reo Flying Cloud was the first car to have these brakes.

It appeared in January, 1927. We said then that we thought these were the best brakes any car, regardless of price, ever had.

Now comes the Hydraulic Brake Company, which makes other types of brakes than the Internal Hydraulic, but they know, as engineers know, which are the better.

They make tens of thousands more sets of external hydraulic brakes than they do of these internal hydraulics, yet they endorse the latter as the "best."

More costly? Yes. But Reo policy is to give the best regardless of cost.

But try them yourself

The best proof of this claim to the "world's best brakes" is a test that you make for yourself. So we hope you will ask for a demonstration. We want you to take a Flying Cloud out on slippery, greasy roads or streets. We want you to learn for yourself how swiftly, yet gently, they halt you in a straight line when you must STOP.

Be sure to try them out.

ATLANTA NASH MEN RETURN FROM MEET

F. P. Fletcher, service manager, and R. W. Wommack, parts manager of the Martin-Nash Motor company, distributors for the Nash Motors company, have just returned from the factory service meeting at Kenosha, where for three days they participated in discussion of service to the owner. Ninety service and parts managers from all sections of the country attended the gathering. C. W. Nash, president of the company; James T. Wilson, vice president; H. H. Pettit, vice president; L. L. Virgil, service manager, and George F. Gieselmann, assistant service manager, were in charge of the meeting.

Mr. Nash, at the outset, made it plain that no department in the entire Nash factory or dealer organization was of "more vital importance to the continued success of the business than that of service to the owner."

"It has been my observation," said Mr. Nash, "that, taking the automobile industry as a whole, too little attention is given the customer after he has once paid out good money for a motor car. A situation such as that is fundamentally wrong, for the owner, entirely satisfied with his car and entirely satisfied with the service rendered him by the dealer, will just naturally tell his friends and that, in my opinion is the surest avenue to increased business. As a matter of fact, I feel that the title 'service manager' is somewhat misleading for you really are as well an important branch of the sales department.

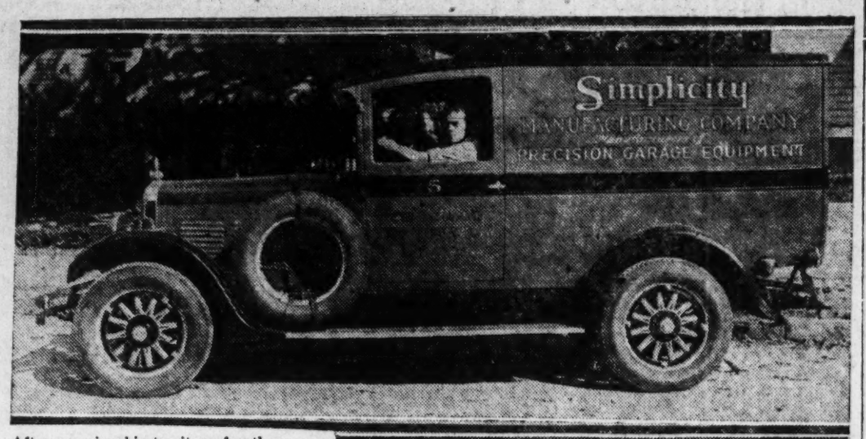

"One of our very successful eastern dealers when here at the factory recently told me that he confines practically all of his selling efforts to owners of Nash cars. In other words, his owners, because of the service rendered them, are not only glad but anxious to talk about the Nash car and Nash service to their friends and acquaintances. Other dealers that I know are conducting their business along these same lines and are building up a good will for the Nash car and for themselves that is directly reflected in increased sales.

"While on this subject, I just want to say first of all that I sincerely believe the Nash product today is the finest we have ever built and I feel that service rendered by our dealers generally is good, but in the matter of service as with production, it is always dangerous to be entirely satisfied. We must, if we expect to progress, continually strive for further improvement."

Reo Speed Wagon Junior for Display Use

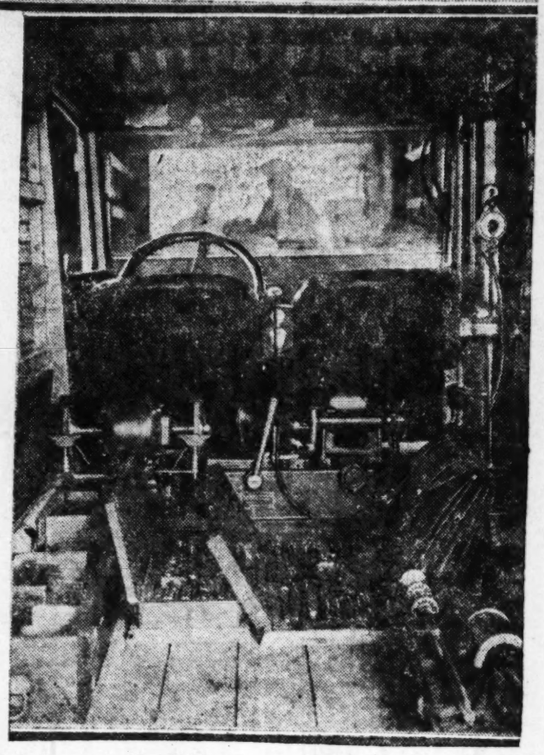

After covering his territory for the first time in his new Reo Speed Wagon Junior panel delivery job, which carries his exhibit of garage equipment and machinery, Mr. Roscoe A. Carden, manager of the local branch of the Simplicity Manufacturing company, manufacturers of "Precision" garage equipment, speaks very highly of his truck. Before purchasing this job Mr. Carden looked over all available trucks of various makes, and decided upon the Speed Wagon Junior because of its good looks, sturdiness, ease of handling and last, but not least, driver comfort. Mr. Carden, desirous of seeing just what was to be accomplished in his territory, decided to make the initial trip himself, and he now feels sure that he will not be imposing any hardship upon his travelers when he gives them a Reo Speed Wagon Junior in which to cover their territory.

This big little job attracted the attention of garage men and the general public wherever Mr. Carden called, and he attributes a great deal of his initial success to the appearance of this truck, and the prestige which it adds to a line already well known and well thought of. On more than one occasion, according to Mr. Carden, the wonderful four-wheel, internal-expanding, hydraulic brakes were responsible for the averting of what might have been serious accidents due to the bad conditions of the roads in some sections of his territory.

The ordinary truck, not possessing speed nor comfort, nor yet safety, would not permit covering nearly as much territory as is covered with the Speed Wagon Junior.

Mr. Carden is located at 778 Tift avenue.

NEW TIRE ANNOUNCED BY MILLER COMPANY

Akron, Ohio, December 10.—A new chapter in automobile tire history is begun with the announcement of the new 30x4.50 balloon tire for small cars, according to W. F. Pfeiffer, general manager of The Miller Rubber company.

"It is believed," said Mr. Pfeiffer, "that the creation of the new size balloon is prophetic of the most popular tire of the future. That around this tire will be built volume production in excess of any other size in the history of motor cars and air cushion tires. One of the decisive factors back of this prophecy is that the new size is standard equipment for the new model Ford car, and doubtless will be for others.

"Not only will the Ford cars of the future be equipped with the new 30x4.50, but other light cars with rims for 29x4.40 tires may use them for replacements. All cars with 21-inch rims may use the new balloon size; this includes Model T Fords, Chevrolets and other light cars.

"Tire history, in its progress, has been divided into definite periods. The cord tire replaced the old fabric tire when 30x3 and 30x3 1-2 were the most popular sizes. Another step forward produced the balloon tire which gained in popularity over the high pressure cord and balloons became standard equipment. Now the new 30x4.50 makes a bid for the spotlight; designed to meet the requirements of greater speed in lighter cars.

"Miller tire engineers point out that clincher tires still constitute about 30 per cent of tire volume. Smaller balloon sizes have not yet put clincher tires in the place of the almost obsolete fabric tire. Smaller balloon sizes will be in large demand for an indefinite period, engineers claim, but, eventually, the new 30x4.50 will be the most used of all tires."

PIERCE CREST UPON NEW CARS

Pierce-Arrow, famous for years as "the car without a nameplate on its radiator," has recently appeared with a colorful heraldic emblem that is a fitting tribute to the founder of the Pierce-Arrow Motor Car company.

The new series 81, announced only a few weeks ago, carries encased in the nickeled shell of the radiator, the coat of arms and crest of the Pierce family, a most interesting addition to the heraldic devices found on motor cars.

The Pierce family is an ancient family of the county of Northumberland, England, and well-known long before the time of Elizabeth. Thomas Pierce, immigrant ancestor of the Pierce family, came to this country in 1633-34 and settled in Charlestown, Mass. He was born in England in 1583.

The Pierce coat of arms consists of three ravens, rising, on a gold shield, crossed with a bar of red. The motto on the ribbon is "dixit et fecit," meaning, "He said and he did." The crest is a dove with an olive branch in its beak.

This description has been followed with heraldic exactness in designing the new series 81 radiator emblem.

HOW TO DRIVE AND CARE FOR CAR

Two piercing eyes, two balls of fire, betray the lion's stealthy march across the veldt or the stalking tiger's sortie from his lair. But just as dangerous, yet common to our every day experience, are the headlamps of passing cars that meet us with a "glare," which means according to the dictionary" to look with piercing eyes."

But "piercing eyes" are not essential to a clear view of the road ahead nor do bright lights alone cause glare. But bright lights, improperly focused and adjusted, shine from left to right and from road to tree top, spray the approaching car with a venomous barrage of light and make driving dangerous for all concerned.

Much has been done by lamy designers but the cooperation of car owners is still needed. The better cars use lamps of the most improved type having two filaments, one giving light far down the road, the other dropping the light close to the car for passing. But even with the best of equipment, the right illumination of the road will not be obtained, uninterrupted, without some intelligent effort to maintain the lights in proper focus and adjustment. A minor collision may affect a front fender and at the same time disturb the lamp adjustment, or the replacement of a bulb may affect the focus. Occasional checking alone will tell whether the lamps are still giving light that makes night driving both enjoyable and safe.

How To Adjust Your Headlamps.

Where an electrical service station has the proper facilities, it is best to let their experts do the work. Otherwise the owner of the car can do the job, placing the car so that the lamps are about 25 feet from the garage. The garage doors then act as a screen on which the light from the lamps may be thrown. Here it should form a wide flat pattern of light, with the brightest part no higher than the center of the lamps. Immediately above the light part should be a dark portion, an indication that the lights will not shine brightly in the eyes of an approaching driver.

Before the height of the light beam is finally checked, however, the focus of each lamp should be tested. Where a lens is used to spread the light, it can be removed and the bulb moved in or out by means of the screw adjustment on the back, until a clear spot of light is obtained. This can be done with one lamp at a time, the other being covered. When each bulb has been focused, the lenses may be replaced and each lamp checked to see that it is tilted forward the right amount.

At this point in the test, it is well to consider how much the lamps tilt up due to deflection of the rear springs with a full load of passengers. If possible, load the car and adjust the forward tilt of the whole lamp by means of the adjustment provided under each lamp. Make the horizontal line of the garage doors at the same height as the center of the lamps. Then make sure that none of the bright light comes above this line. If the car cannot be tested with full load of passengers, the bright light should stop at a point three or four inches below the horizontal test line on the doors.

Automobile Men To Name Officers Monday Night

The outstanding feature of the big annual meeting and celebration of the Atlanta Automobile association Monday night at 6:30 o'clock on the roof garden of the Ansley hotel will be the 20-minute business address by Harry G. Moock, managing director of the greater market development division of the Automotive Equipment association.

Mr. Moock is one of the most notable figures in the automotive industry, and his visit is a distinct compliment to Atlanta and the southeast.

Clarence Knowles, sales manager for Martin-Nash Motor company, is general chairman of the committee on arrangements for the annual meeting, and has sent out several urgent bulletins during the past few weeks to dealers, executives, department heads and their assistants to secure their tickets early, because the accommodations necessarily are limited. Tickets are $2.50 each and can be secured by sending remittance for the necessary number of tickets to the executive secretary, 1308 Citizens and Southern Bank building.

The address of Mr. Moock will be preceded by the annual election of officers, a special nominating committee having been appointed, consisting of the past presidents of the association, of which D. C. Black is chairman.

Following the business session and the address of Mr. Moock, the members will sit down to an elaborate course dinner, during the service of which entertainment features will be introduced under the leadership of "Fat" Elrod, who has been made master of ceremonies for the occasion.

PAIGE HAS LARGEST NOVEMBER IN YEARS

Detroit, Mich., December 10.—The largest volume of November sales ever secured since the organization of the Paige-Detroit Motor Car company, 18 years ago, was announced yesterday by Robert C. Graham, vice president of the company.

"This was the greatest November in Paige history, and it exceeded any previous November by over 18 per cent," said Mr. Graham. It follows on the heels of a continued increase in Paige sales during the fall and early winter, where automobile buying usually shows a steady falling off from September on. Paige dealers sold many more cars in October than in September, and still further increased November over October. At certain key points Paige retail sales in November exceeded sales for any other month in the year, and despite the lateness of the buying season, we anticipate an equally active demand during December.

"This unusual sales activity is particularly gratifying since it reflects the public's approval of the Paige models."

PRIEST INVENTS DEADLY EXPLOSIVE

New Invention Claimed To Be Deadlier Than Dynamite But Safer to Handle.

New York, December 10.—(AP)—Explosive deadlier than dynamite, but safer to handle because it loses its power after 30 minutes, is described by its inventor, the Rev. Johann J. Braun, a Catholic parish priest of Marbach, Germany. Father Braun, who said he already has taken out 20 patents on his explosive in Germany, is in this country for a brief period applying for a patent in Washington. The money he receives from his patents, he said, is devoted to Catholic charities in his native land.

As briefly described by him, his invention is the perfection of a fundamental idea known for a long time. "It is known that certain carbonaceous materials—soot, coal dust, etc.—may be used with liquid air to form explosives," he said, "but the use of a cartridge having a mercury cap detonator, as employed in the past, has many objections, mainly the liability of pre-ignition or accidental detonation. I have perfected an explosive compound which may be fired by a safe type of ignite. and which is proof against spontaneous combustion and accidental detonation."

The cartridge, Father Braun explained, is fitted with the igniter, dipped in liquid air for ten minutes, and is then ready for use, but remains explosive for only 30 minutes. It may be transported and handled with absolute safety till dipped, he added, and can be safely extracted from a bore after half an hour.

EXPEDITION HAS CANADIAN PERMIT

Ottawa, December 10.—(AP)—Commander Donald MacMillan, the United States arctic explorer, who is at present wintering at Nain, about half way up the Labrador coast, had to obtain a permit from the Canadian government to conduct scientific and exploration work in the northern latitudes. This was made known by government officials when asked to comment on a report that the American scientist had created some precedent this summer in applying for such a permit.

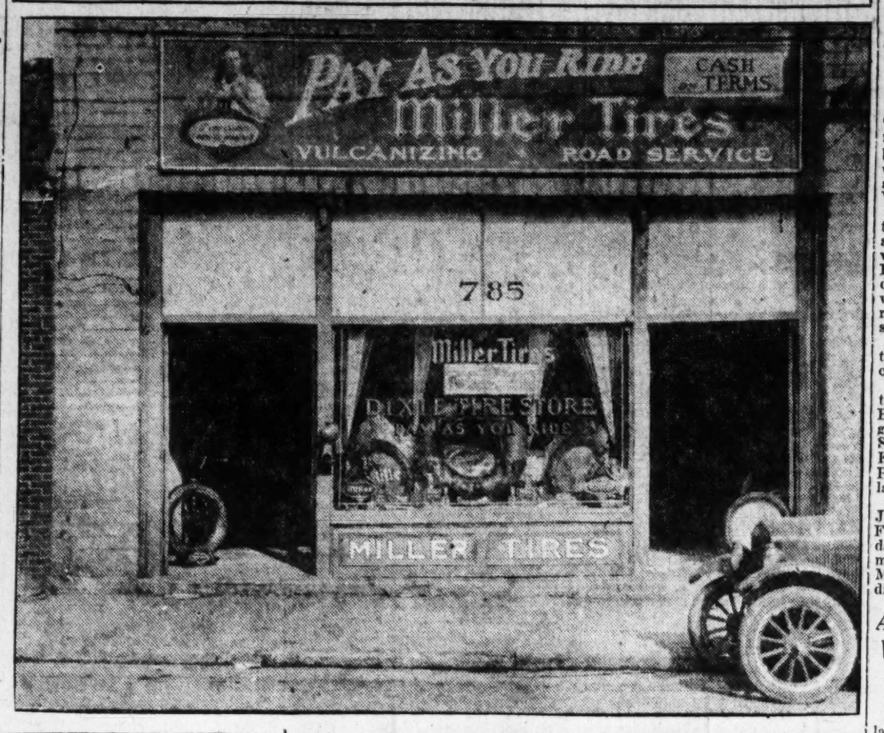

Permission to MacMillan was granted on application for the first time in 1926. The conditions under which the explorer is permitted to pursue his activities are laid down in the ordinance which makes it clear that the objects of such entry are exclusively for scientific or exploratory purposes and not commercial or political in any way. He is required strictly to observe provisions of the northwest game act, to furnish the northwest territories and Yukon branch of the department of the interior of the statement showing the number of persons to accompany him, and the nationality of each, and to furnish the department with any scientific information which he obtains, a report setting forth the localities visited, time spent at different places and a list of the specimens taken under various permits or licenses.

Operator Needs Education, Says Personnel Head

Girls with good junior or senior high school records make better telephone operators than those with only an elementary school education, and the cooperation of the public school officials is an invaluable aid in selecting operators from the thousands of applicants, according to Miss Lois Bryant, of the traffic department of the Southern Bell Telephone company.

Miss Bryant, who interviews about 2,500 girls a year, was the principal speaker at the meeting of the Personnel association of Atlanta, held Friday evening at Rich's tea room. She described the painstaking system of selecting several hundred girls a year to replace vacancies and to supply the need for an increased force.

"The dial telephones have by no means driven the girl operator from her place," said Miss Bryant. "That is proved by the fact that our force is steadily growing.

"Experience with thousands of girls has taught us some valuable facts. We have adopted the policy of employing no girl who does not live in Atlanta and at home, for it costs us a great deal to train them, and we can't afford to train them and have them grow homesick and quit their places. We prefer girls of about 17 years. We can't use girls who have taken on too much weight, because they take up too much room. They must have good eyes and they must know colors. Strange to say, we have never discovered a case of color blindness in girls."

Members of the Personnel association, which was organized to study problems of employing and training various types of employees, asked scores of questions of Miss Bryant about her methods of choosing from the thousands of applicants for places.

The meeting was presided over by George H. Phillips, of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company, its president, and the general discussion was shared in by several men and women who employ and train large numbers of young men and women. The association works in close cooperation with the public school system of Atlanta.

Chest Fund Still $40,000 Short, Last Plea Is Made

Atlanta's response to the appeal of the Community Chest and its 35 agencies was measured Saturday by the sum of $460,000 as contributed for support of the city's work of charity relief and human reconstruction in 1928.

This was an increase of $40,000 from the amount raised in the public canvass, which closed November 1, but there exists yet a shortage of $40,000 in the fund of $500,000, which was declared necessary for complete operation and full effectiveness of the 35 agencies.

With the announcement of $460,000 in contributions, officials of the Chest said they will discontinue the telephone appeal which for more than three weeks has been made by a group of young women employees of the several agencies. This appeal, with its explanation of the work of constructive helpfulness and preventive charity as performed by the Chest agencies, was effective in obtaining contributions of more than half of the $40,000 increase since November 1.

However, it was explained, the vital need of the Chest for all the money asked still continues, and that an opportunity will remain open for citizens who have not been called or otherwise solicited, to send their contributions to the Community Chest office at 263 1-2 Peachtree street, telephone Walnut 3211.

It was suggested also that business houses whose employees have not been approached by systematic canvass may call the Chest for arrangements.

Without the full amount necessary for the 1928 service of the 35 agencies, there will be a general loss of efficiency in the city's charity work, according to the statement Saturday, and the danger of suffering and unrelieved want in Atlanta next year is imminent. It will be necessary, it was pointed out, to cut the budget of each agency nearly 10 per cent, a circumstance that will cause a lack of means to perofrm all the relief work necessary.

Chamber Board To Name Official Staff Wednesday

Directors of the Atlanta chamber of commerce will meet at 12:30 o'clock next Wednesday to organize the new board and to elect a president, three vice presidents and a treasurer, it is announced by President George W. West.

Both the old and new directors and the ex-officio members of the board are expected to attend the meeting, which will be the last held this year. Besides the election of officers, a new director must be elected to fill a vacancy, one of the newly elected directors having found it impossible to serve.

The directors for 1928, including the "hold-over" members and those recently elected, are:

Philip H. Alston, L. H. Beall, Milton W. Bell, G. C. Bowden, F. L. Butler, William Candler, Milton Dargan, Jr., Henderson Hallman, George S. Harris, F. E. Kamper, H. B Kennedy, J. S. Kennedy, Robert S. Parker, Horace Russell, Robert Strickland, Jr., and Cator Woolford.

Ex-officio directors are Edwin S. Johnson and George M. Hope, of the Fulton county commission; I. N. Ragsdale, mayor of Atlanta; W. D. Hoffman, past president, and Miss Lois Manning, president of the women's division.

ATLANTA CHAMBER WILL GIVE DINNER FOR NEW MEMBERS

The 286 new members of the Atlanta chamber of commerce elected during the past 12 months will be honor guests at a fellowship dinner to be given by the chamber in its dining hall on Monday evening at 6:30 o'clock, it is announced by Milton Dargan, Jr., chairman of the membership committee.

Dr. David Marx, one of the most forceful speakers in Atlanta, will deliver an address on "Civic Righteousness."

The Sears, Roebuck & Co. agricultural foundation will provide the musical program, including the "Foundation Four," Hawaiian guitarists and the Honolulu Duo, and there will be several other entertainment features.

Directors of the chamber of commerce will act as hosts of the occasion and the new numbers will be given opportunity to meet officers and directors and one another.

Membership in the chamber of commerce has been increased materially in the past year through the efforts of Mr. Dargan and his committee and the two membership secretaries, J. H. Lambert and D. C. Owen.

SALVATION ARMY, PLANS CHRISTMAS DINNERS FOR NEEDY

The Salvation Army relief officers are extremely busy these days with preparations for the usual Christmas dinners for the needy. Investigation and visitation has been going on for some days. The kettles are now on the streets and army officials hope that the citizens of Atlanta will respond to the appeal on behalf of the deserving needy. Many cases are now receiving the attention of Adjutant Eunice McCrae and her workers.

It is intended to supply a large basket filled with food to each family which, upon investigation, is found worthy, and many hundreds will thus be cared for. In the entire country last year the Salvation Army provided Christmas dinners for upwards of a half million people.

Large numbers of men and women appeal daily at the Army's relief office in the temple, 54 Ellis street, E. Anyone able to give employment, either temporary or permanent, are requested to phone Adjutant McCrae at Walnut 1940.

Whisky Runners Ready To Quit, Says Friedman

Philadelphia, December 10.—(AP)—Due to the vigilance of the United States coast guard, rum-runners in Canada are "disgusted and about ready to quit the whole business," Assistant United States Attorney Henry B. Friedman said today.

Mr. Friedman's statement followed the indictment by the federal grand jury yesterday of 11 men said to be the leaders of a gigantic international liquor-smuggling conspiracy. The indictments resulted from the seizure here last September of the rum ship Bulko with a cargo of liquor valued at more than $500,000.

"From mingling with the rum-runners in Canada," said Mr. Friedman, who has made frequent trips there during the investigation, "I have learned they are all disgusted with their business. The capture of vessels and cargo by the coast guard has made them so. They have sustained tremendous losses and are about ready to quit the whole business."

Housewives Against Dole.

Housewives of England are against the dole, for it is the cause of the shortage of servants, they claim. Harassed queens of the homes are compelled to do their own work because, they say, girls are finding it easier to accept unemployment assistance from the government than to go to work, and they add that if the dole were removed there would be a different attitude toward positions in homes.

Grier's Almanac Again Floods Mails Bound for Rural Homes of Southeast

A typical daily shipment of Grier's Almanacs to rural delivery routes of the southeast during early December

"When the moon changes" and "when to set the old speckle hen" are not important concerns in cities, but they are vital in the country districts, and that is why Grier's Almanac has always had such decided popularity in the south.

Owned and published by the John B. Daniel company for three generations, the circulation has steadily increased until the output of Grier's Almanacs now numbers 1,250,000 copies. The distribution includes North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas. Two hundred thousand copies are distributed in Georgia alone, one in every rural mail box in the state.

Many generations have come and gone since Grier's Almanac was established as the pioneer in its field. Maintaining a reputation for accurate forecasts and worthwhile suggestions, it has grown in recognized value in rural homes in the south Atlantic and Gulf states, these being the states covered in the predictions.

Grier's Almanac contains valuable information regarding weather forecasts, astronomical calculations, garden work, cotton crops and prices, tables of population, postal rates, court calendar and other facts of interest to southern people. Lawyers find that it gives helpful data concerning the date that court convenes in their localities.

Yellow with years, copies of Grier's Almanac have been found in old cornerstones and among ancient heirlooms showing in what light it was regarded by early settlers.

Once again Grier's Almanacs go to the mail identical in cover as over 125 years ago. Truck load after truck load they go. The 1928 edition has come from the press. Once again the country home is supplied with its "bureau of information" and for the next 365 days the farmer will be able to check again his own judgment of weather which is often amazingly accurate—the observations of perhaps the most noted forecaster in the south, Professor Otis Ashemore, of Savannah.

FEW CLOTHES AID TO HEALTH, CLAIM

BY RALPH HEINZEN.

Paris, December 10. — (United News.)—The death-rate among French women is found by fashion experts and doctors to be in inverse proportion to the length of their skirts.

French women have never been so healthy as since the abolition of the corset and the institution of knee-length dresses. Statistics are there to prove it, and naturally the fashion experts take all the credit.

When women were bundled and swathed from their necks to their heels and skirts swept up the dust, French women were more liable to tuberculosis than French men. Tables of medical statistics show that today after a few years of skirt reform, women form but one-fourth of the tuberculosis patients under treatment in France.

The doctors declare that the abolition of the corset was the greatest accomplishment for the good of women's health in the present generation. Short skirts have brought about another needed reform, the passing of the garter, which bound the knees and seriously interfered with circulation in the nether limbs.

Bobbed hair brought on for several winters an epidemic of colds in the head, but with time women have conquered this ailment. The present fashion demand for fur coats, or at least fur-trimmed coats, is declared by doctors to be an excellent step forward in further lowering of the death rate.

One promingent women's doctor pointed out that a woman is better dressed for winter than a man. In the over-heated apartments she wears little, her silk dresses providing little warmth. When she goes outside, her fur coat gives her full protection against winter cold and rains. Man on the other hand is overdressed for heated homes and when he goes outside with only an overcoat added his overheated body is a prey to germs.

The American mountain lion is powerful enough to be dangerous to man, but is really extremely timid.

YULE WARNINGS OF POSTOFFICE

Mail early, and be sure to wrap carefully and give the complete, correct address.

This is the warning given Atlantans by Postmaster E. K. Large from a wealth of experience gained in previous Christmas rushes at the postoffice.

Although everything possible is being done by the postoffice department to insure prompt delivery of Christmas mail, the best insurance against a delayed gift is to place it in the mails now with a written injunction: "Do Not Open Until Christmas," Mr. Large said.

Christmas mailing this year will cost the Atlanta postoffice approximately $200,000 for extra help and extra equipment, it is estimated. More than 500 additional employees will start work on December 15 for the duration of the annual rush, and the customary mailing stations will be established at various points around the city.

The railway mail service is hiring additional express cars and extra employees to cope with the expected rush of mail. But even with all of the additional aid the postoffice department will receive, the best thing to do is to mail early, the postmaster warned.

The rush has already started at the Atlanta postoffice, with the volume of mail increasing by leaps and bounds every day. From the standpoint of postal receipts this December is expected to prove the greatest month on record for the local postoffice.

Guide Gets Heroism Medal.

For his heroism in saving the life of M. Rene Weiss, a prominent city official of Paris, Alphonse Couttet, the best known guide of Mont Blanc, has just been awarded the French government's medal for heroism and self sacrifice. Couttet was guiding Weiss, when in making a descent of one of the peaks of Mont Blanc, Weiss slipped and rolled down a snowy slope at the foot of which was the Nantillons glacier and its crevasses. Couttet plunged head forecost 60 feet into the ravine, risking death by being dashed against the rocks, caught up with Weiss and stopped him at the edge of the glacier after the two had rolled 50 feet together.

Decatur Branch of Lambeth - Eskridge

In order to serve their Decatur and DeKalb county owners with prompt as well as the best service, the Lambeth-Eskridge Motor company recently opened a branch in Decatur to retail and service Dodge products in that territory. This branch is in charge of Hugh Crowder who is one of the best informed automobile men in the south. Above photo shows their branch home, top inset, Hugh Crowder, bottom, their especially trained service men.

Giant and Midget Approve Cadillac Adjustable Seat

Two members of Hollywood's motion picture colony—a young giant well over six feet tall and a midget of exactly 28 inches—have been among the first to capitalize upon the advantage of the adjustable driver's seat in the new Cadillac.

The big fellow is Karl Dane of "The Big Parade" fame, and the midget, so tiny that he easily stands erect in the tonneau of Dane's new sedan, is Gene Adams. They are both working in Hollywood, taking a principal part in the new Metro-Goldwyn picture which is being filmed there, entitled "Baby Mine." They both use the car going back and forth to location.

The new car is Dane's second Cadillac and both film stars were immediately interested in the device by which the driver's seat can be moved forward or backward to suit the requirements of the tallest or shortest driver (almost). The device is a neat silver handle mounted atop the backrest of the front seat. A slight turn slides the seat forward or back.

There is one requirement, however, and that is that the driver be tall enough to reach the floor with his feet when sitting upright. And this is too much even for a very clever little man of 28 inches.

However, a man as tall as Karl Dane and many diminutive women find they can drive the new Cadillac with equal ease and comfort. The company also supplies brake and clutch pedal extensions, so that there can be a maximum difference of fully five inches in the leg room of the driver's seat, and that takes care of everyone as tall as Karl Dane and those others who are reasonable in their approach to the stature of Gene Adams.

WRITER DESCRIBES DREAD MASTOIDITIS

Removing the mystery from mastoiditis, the current issue of Physical Culture magazine describes clearly in non-technical language the causes of that dread malady which is particularly prevalent at this season of the year, and shows how it may be guarded against. Further, the writer shows by actual example a method of treatment which may obviate dangerous and costly operations.

Naturally the avoidance of suc ha treacherous disease is of importance to every one and the article in question stresses the simple precautions that will effectively remove its causes before a serious condition has time to develop. Following the description of the factors which result in mastoid trouble the article describes emergency treatment for use in acute cases before skilled help is available.

SAYS AUTOMOBILE TAX ON WRONG FOUNDATION

Taxing of automobiles by the federal government should be discontinued at once and all levies of this nature should be confined to the various states, in the opinion of H. H. Franklin. License fees should be all that the car ownership of the United States should be called upon to bear. Addition of excise tax, gasoline tax, personal property tax put too much of a burden on the automobile, he adds.

"I regard the advocating of federal taxes because the automobile is a thing of luxury, or even a semi-luxury, as the wrong attitude," Mr. Franklin states. It would be hard to get the twenty million owners to admit their cars are luxuries. Take the automobile out of American life for a week and its place as a necessity would be absolutely established.

"I cannot agree with Secretary Mellon's conclusion that the federal road building program should be supported by federal taxes on cars. Good roads should be viewed on the basis of what they have done for the life of the country and not for the pleasure of a special class. They occupy the same importance in today's economic structure as the railroads themselves. Although the automobile hastened good roads, they were bound to have come anyhow. The progress of the country would not have been content with backwoods limitations.

"The public should not permit the automobile to reach the state of the railroads, which became the butt of disproportionate and unfair taxation to the extent that growth was impeded. For the greatest benefit of the people, everything should be done to make the use of automobiles cheaper and thereby more extensive."

Precision Is Important Factor in Auto Building

Precision—long recognized as the talisman of quality and durability in engines—has come to play an equally important part in the manufacture of bodies. Combination of beauty with riding comfort, sturdiness and long life seems to require the same accuracy as is used in the choice of metals and the machining of parts for the engine.

Interesting parallels in standards of accuracy required in producing these two parts of a car are drawn by William N. Davis, body engineer of the Cadillac Motor Car company.

"It is not a far cry," Mr. Davis states, "from the machining of an engine part to 1-10,000th part of an inch to the selection of mohair cloth with 56,000 tiny threads, or picts, as they are called, to the square inch. Every part is measured and gauged with the same accuracy as applies to the building of the engine.

"There is a similar parallel in quality standards of materials. A Cadillac crankshaft requires a very definite quality of steel. In manufacturing bodies the plate glass, broadcloth, velvet or hair must reach very definite quality standards.

"Quality of upholstery cloth is determined by laboratory methods and by the skill of trained specialists. In the laboratory, violet rays try the fastness of colors. Pulling machines test strength of threads. Acids prove purity. Then there are the upholstery specialists, men who know cloth through years of experience. Their judgment of upholstery amounts almost to a sixth sense.

"Few people realize the number of gauges used in building bodies. Parts are manufactured in sub-assemblies the same as parts of the chassis. The whole is then brought together in one major assembly. The use of gauges in making the parts makes sure of an accurate fit in the major assembly."

How horses run was demonstrated in 1872 by a row of cameras strung along a race track to snap pictures as the horses ran past.

When the Hume dam in Australia is completed in 1930, Australian and the United States will have the two largest reservoir dams in the world.

ard Makes Splendid Climb of Buena Vista Hill

Some streets in San Francisco are built up the sides of hills so steep that motorists rarely attempt them. These conditions probably contributed to make Baker street the steepest of all 'Frisco steep streets, a challenge to automobile owners.

Semi-occasionally a car of great power would be able to negotiate the pull by working up to top speed on a long approach, then dropping into second gear after momentum had carried the car up part of the grade and, shifting quickly into low gear before the motor stalled in second gear, finally creep over the top at a snail's pace with the engine roaring at full power in low gear.

A representative of the Frisco Packard distributors asserted his belief that the improved Packard eight could climb the Baker street hill in high gear, so he took a new Pickard eight phaeton off the salesroom floor and drove to the foot of the hill.

The car was brought to a dead stop at the base of the steep ascent. The driver started in second gear and shifted to high gear. The car began gathering speed inch by inch, as it climbed steadily. Before any of the spectators realized that the "impossible" had been accomplished the car had swept over the top of the hill.

News of the Packard's remarkable climb in San Francisco is paralleled here by the fact that Packard stock cars have made a number of phenomenal pulls in high up Atlanta's many steep hills.

Atlanta Is Given Publicity On Pennsylvania R. R. Menu

Atlanta is given an excellent bit of publicity this week by a full page published in the menu cards of the dining cars of the entire Pennsylvania railroad system.

The article was written at the invitation of the Pennsylvania system by B. S. Barker, executive vice president of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, and published as a courtesy to the city, although the lines of the railroad do not touch Atlanta. Many thousands of the menu cards will be distributed among patrons of the dining cars.

The article, as printed on the menu cards, follows:

"Atlanta, at the foot of the Blue Ridge, is 1,050 feet above sea level, the highest large city east of Denver. Its surrounding country is exceptionally beautiful.

"The city has become the great distributing center for the southeastern region, and hundreds of the most important industrial corporations of the country maintain branches and warehouses there.

"Atlanta has much to offer the tourist or visitor as well as the business enterprise seeking closer contact with its markets. It is noted for its splendid and numerous golf courses, upon one of which Bobby Jones, the world's most famous golfer, gained his phenomenal skill. Its climate permits playing golf every day in the year.

"The city is served by eight railroads, with 15 radiating main lines, and is within overnight reach of the entire southeast.

"Atlanta's educational facilities are unusually extensive. Besides a splendid system of public schools, it offers courses at the Georgia School of Technology, Emory university, Oglethorpe university, Agnes Scott college, for young women; Columbia Theological seminary, the Georgia Military academy, and numerous private institutions.

"Sixteen miles away, and easily seen from the tall office buildings of Atlanta, is Stone Mountain, with its great Confederate memorial sculpture, which has been called the 'eighth wonder of the world.'

"From the esthetic standpoint, Atlanta is especially proud of her annual spring season of Metropolitan grand opera, her own Atlanta Symphony orchestra, and the High Museum of Fine Arts."

BIGGEST ARMS HAUL IN HISTORY MADE IN BELFAST

Belfast, Ireland, December 10.—(AP) One of the biggest arms hauls in the history of Ireland was made on the outskirts of Belfast today by the authorities, who seized a machine gun, rifles, automatic pistols, 85 grenades, 20,000 rounds of ammunition and 23 very lights.

The raid was made in Andersonstown or the west end of Belfast. The authorities here have been keenly alert ever since revelations made in a recent Dublin case regarding a revival of republican activity in the north of Ireland.

CUNARD INAUGURATES NEW CUBAN SERVICE

During the season of 1928, the Cunard line will run the new 20,000-ton steamers Laconia and Scythia as cabin ships in the New York, Boston and Liverpool service. Commencing with the Scythia, sailing Saturday, April 28, 1928, for Liverpool via Boston, followed by the Laconia on May 12, a fortnightly service will be provided exclusively for one class cabin, tourist third cabin and regular third class passengers.

The entire accommodation hitherto comprising the salon or first-class section of these vessels, will be available at the moderate cabin rates, while much of the second cabin space will become tourist third cabin. The regular third class accommodation will continue to be used as such.

The alternate Saturday sailings completing the regular weekly Liverpool service will be filled by the Franconia, Samaria and Corinthia, carrying first, second and third class passengers as usual.

On the completion of the 1928 tourist season the Laconia and Scythia will again be operated as first-class ships. Their employment during the summer will in no way affect the status of the vessels during the winter season when the present policy of operating them as first-class will be maintained in keeping with the high standards of the Cunard winter cruise program.

It will pay you to insist on the improved Pan-Am motor oil. This tougher oil retains its body in spite of engine heat and friction; protecting cylinder walls and bearings effectively.

Pan-Am Gasoline is clean gasoline—carefully processed and purified to make it so. This clean fuel means added miles to the gallon. Get it at the familiar cream-colored Pan-Am pumps.

Never before so important to buy CLEAN GASOLINE ...TOUGHER OIL

TODAY'S motors achieve their smoother power and more efficient operation by greater demands than ever before on fuel and lubricating oil. Their higher speed develops scorching heat that soon breaks down old-fashioned oils. And higher compressions demand carbon-free cylinders.

To meet these new conditions Pan-Am offers you—

CLEAN gasoline

The extra-careful Pan-Am refining process removes the carbon-forming elements and corrosives found in many gasolines, as well as dirt and sediment. Notice how crystal-clear it is next time you see a Pan-Am pump. No wonder it keeps your motor cleaner—gives more power and mileage.

TOUGHER oil

The improved Pan-Am motor oil is especially refined from paraffin-base crudes to stand up under greater heat and friction. It is tougher; adhering to cylinder walls and bearings effectively. Extra-long life cuts the cost of this tougher oil below that of doubtful kinds.

Both of these better motor products are sold by Pan-Am dealers everywhere. Look for the familiar cream-colored Pan-Am pump. It marks a reliable place to trade.

Why Not Combine Sentiment and Good Business?

MORE and more thinking people are realizing that it is very much better to confine their gift purchases to articles that will afford pleasure over a long period of time. Jewelry, for instance, is an almost perpetual reminder of the sentiment that inspired the gift.

And there is a gift of jewelry here at the price you want to pay. It may be diamonds, or solid silver—or it may be an inexpensive novelty. But if the box in which it is sent carries the Latham & Atkinson label the quality of the gift is unquestionable.

Spring Hill Club Gives Public Welfare Program.

The Spring Hill club, a member of the Cobb county federation, presented at its December meeting at the home of Mrs. Frank C. Dabney, with the president, Mrs. W. M. Jenkins, presiding, a program on public welfare arranged by Mrs. Charles Boyd Davis, along the lines of that in state and general federation. This little neighborhood club with 14 members has done outstanding local work, cooperated in all county welfare and civic work and built, lighted and beautified their car stop on the Atlanta-Marietta interurban before the company covered or put up lights at any of the stops.

Mrs. H. E. Hague, president of the seventh district, and Miss Julia McIntosh Sparks, state chairman of press and publicity, were guests of the club. Mrs. Hague talked on "Misfit Programs" and Miss Sparks told the advantages of being federated in state and general federation. A motion was made to take up the matter of federating at a later meeting.

Members of the club read short articles or told of visits they had made to the state tuberculosis sanitorium, Home for Defective Children, in Augusta; Georgia Child's Home; a general discussion of welfare work in Cobb county was participated in by several members, and every member urged to register and vote.

The hostess, Mrs. Dabney, served a salad course at the close of the meeting.

The custom of giving sweet-smelling perfumes, incense, and fragrant pot-pourri is as old as Christmas. It was established when the Wise Men brought frankincense to a manger, glorified by a Baby. Perhaps that is one reason why the Christmas season is so inextricably associated with rich scents. And modern gifts of perfumes are the twentieth century prototypes of those ancient, beautiful things that celebrated the dawning of the first Christmas.

Whitehall, Cor. Alabama

NOW THAT THE RAILWAY TRACKS are being lowered so that magnificent concrete bridges may span Pryor street and Central avenue, changing the entire complexion of downtown Atlanta, Mrs. Harry Smith, one of the city's pioneers, formerly Miss Mollie Pitchford, daughter of the late Judge Dan Pitchford, gave out an interesting interview upon its early history. She linked up the Marthasville of 1845, when the main crossroads were named Marietta, Decatur, Peachtree and Whitehall, making a direct comparison with the hustling, bustling of the present-day city, which has developed into one of the great railway and banking centers of the United States.

"Peachtree took its name from a lone Peachtree left from which the Indians made a trail. Whitehall took the name from the Whitehall inn, in West End, located on Lee street. Now it is at 830 Oak street, two doors off of Lee street. It is a two-story frame building with the end to the street, having the same old window sash with 12 panes to the sash, but has been modernized by a tin roof painted green and a modern veranda. Formerly, this was our lamented Frank Stanton's home," says Mrs. Smith.

"Till the early 70's Peachtree street from Baker street was Oak street. The late John W. Grant, Sr., father of the late William Daniel Grant, bought the home at Peachtree and Pine streets and called it 'The Oaks.' Mr. Grant was the first millionaire of Atlanta, a city having more millionaires per capita at present than any city of its size from coast to coast. After he bought the home on Peachtree, then Oak street, there were other wealthy citizens owning fine homes on Oak street and desired Oak street be changed to Peachtree.

"When the petition was brought before council," she continued, "the Peachtree residents protested, saying, 'No, you can't take our name from us. We have the original right.' Hence, a compromise was made, Peachtree and West Peachtree, two streets running parallel, and Peachtree and West Peachtree are not understandable to strangers and tourists coming to the city."

"The city hall and the courthouse," remarked this pioneer, "were in a small brick structure on the grounds where the state capitol now is. The modern city hall is at Marietta and Forsyth streets. The courthouse is at Pryor and Hunter streets, while the city hall now occupies our first government postoffice building. The main postoffice is now at Forsyth and Walton streets, with various sub-stations throughout the city.

"In 1868 there were only chapels, and not any churches, in Atlanta. Trinity Methodist church, on the corner of Trinity avenue and Washington street, is within half a block of its original chapel. The Second Baptist, Central Presbyterian, St. Philip's cathedral and the Immaculate Conception are on the original sites of the former chapels.

"When Sherman set fire to Atlanta," said Mrs. Smith in reminiscing, "Mrs. Mae Holcomb, living at Hunter and McDonald streets (now Capitol avenue), went to Sherman headquarters in the city hall and interceded with him to spare these central churches. Sherman went into detail and told Mrs. Holcomb how strict were the orders given him, but that he would exercise the power of his influence to save these churches. Hence, the churches were saved, and they now demonstrate their own progress.

"The First Methodist church (Wesley chapel) was on Peachtree, opposite the Piedmont hotel. In the early 70's it was rebuilt, a fine brick church on the corner where the Candler building is now. When business encroached, it was rebuilt at the corner of Peachtree and Porter place. The First Baptist, corner of Walton and Forsyth, was rebuilt on the same grounds of the original chapel. When business encroached, it was rebuilt at Peachtree and Cain streets. The First Presbyterian formerly was on a part of the grounds on Marietta street where the Federal building is now. When business demanded, it was rebuilt at Peachtree and Seventeenth streets. Moore's Memorial (Presbyterian), on Luckie near Simpson, the ground being given by Moore, of Moore-Marsh company, well-known pioneer merchants. The ground for Payne Memorial Methodist was donated by E. T. Payne. The Walker Street Methodist was formerly a chapel on Evans street. Sacred Heart church, at Ivy and Peachtree, formerly was a chapel out on Marietta street. The Jewish temple in 1868 was at Garnet and Forsyth. It is now at Pryor and Richardson. There was no orthodox Jewish temple then. These are all of the old churches I can recall," she concluded.

First Street Cars.

The first street cars in the early 70s were mule cars and there were only four lines: Marietta to the Rolling mills, Decatur to Oakland cemetery, Peachtree to Ponce de Leon Springs, occupied by the Ford plant and the mammoth store of Sears, Roebuck & Co., and Whitehall to Peeples street, in West End, near Uncle Remus' home, where there was a path through the woods to his home. When he would ride out to dinner the street car conductor would wait for him, and he would return to his office on the same car. Wren's Nest took its name by a wren building her nest in Uncle Remus' mail box. From these four car lines the street car service of Atlanta today is surpassed by no other city of its size from coast to coast.

In 1868 there was but one theater—De Give's opera house on Marietta street. Later it was the Bijou. In 1894 De Give had the Grand built at Peachtree and Pryor streets. The theatrical development now tells its own story. There were only two hotels in 1868, the National at Whitehall and the single railroad track and the Markham on Loyd street, which is now Central avenue, across from the Union station, which was then a car shed. The old Markham building is still on its old ground, and it is now used as a warehouse. After the war H. I. Kimball, a northern capitalist, had the Kimball house built on the original site. In the early 80s it was destroyed by fire and later rebuilt, resembling the original arcitectural design. The wonderful development in Atlanta's hotels demonstrates its own progress.

M. Rich's store was founded in 1867 at Whitehall and the single railroad track. It was a small country store with eight clerks and it was two steps below the sidewalk. In 1880 M. Rich's two brothers joined him and the store was moved to 54-56-58 Whitehall, where it developed into one of Atlanta's largest department stores. In 1923 it was removed to the mammoth department store at Broad and Alabama and Forsyth streets. It is now a link in the chain of 90 department stores. This week it is celebrating its sixtieth birthday. The show windows (one cost $1,000) are demonstrating the progress at each period of its development.

Davison-Paxon company was founded in 1890 at 59 Whitehall street. It was a small, one-aisle store and it developed into a five and eight-story department store, running through to Broad street. In 1926 it was affiliated with Macy's, of New York. In April, 1927, it celebrated its thirty-seventh year by moving into the Temple of Commerce at Ellis and Peachtree streets. This is said to be the first department store in Atlanta to have received a shipment of dry goods from New York by airplane.

John Keely (1868) had a country dry goods store on the corner of Whitehall and Hunter. After he passed out, Keely company developed it into the large department store on the old landmark.

Chamberlin-Johnson had the only elite store in Atlanta, on the corner where the new High now is.

First Fire Department.

The first fire department included a volunteer force. The fire hall was corner Broad and viaduct, where Vaughn's cafeteria now is located. L. P. Grant donated 100 acres to Atlanta for a city park. It now is Grant park. In 1868 the streets were lighted with oil and there were lamp posts, lighted by the 45 policemen on the evening watch and cut off by the policemen on the morning watch. One of the lamp posts is now at Whitehall and Alabama streets, with a hole in it, struck by a shell during the war between the states. The Daughters of the Confederacy were instrumental in having it reserved and the tablet placed on same.

In conclusion, Mrs. Smith says: "I am proud to state that I am a charter member of the Pioneer society. The Woman's Pioneer society was organized by our lamented, life-long president, Mrs. Joseph Morgan, in 1909, in the assembly hall of the Piedmont hotel."

WHEN PLEASANT COMPANY foregathers about the tea table, when the wintry landscape is shut out by closely drawn curtains, and the firelight flickers on the hearth, there always is much to talk about. And recently somebody exhibited a card announcing that Mrs. Leigh Palmer, a former Atlantan, has associated herself with Mrs. St. Julian Ravenel and they will engage in an extensive shopping business in New York. That's awfully interesting news, as Mrs. Palmer is noted for perfectly exquisite taste and discernment in always making the correct selection, be it for milady's wardrobe or her home.

Mrs. Palmer has traveled all over the world and lived abroad and in the Orient, thereby acquiring a superior knowledge of just what's what in style and quality.

"PICTURES," a New York movie journal, prints an article on Jake Gortatowski, former Atlantan, who was never prone to don the "soup to fish" togs unless compelled to do so.

"Mr. Gortatowski is a crack newspaper man, formerly of Atlanta and for years an executive of the King Features syndicate. He likes theaters and bridge. In a dolled-up tuxedo he strolled into the Friars' card room before going to the premiere of the 'Follis.' Bugs Baer, shooting a little rhummy, glanced up and down on the raiment and threw the room into a prolonged giggle when he piped: 'Neat, but not Gorty.'"

MANY erstwhile Atlantans have made splendid places for themselves down in Miami, one of whom is Mrs. B. M. Boykin, president of the Miami Beach Woman's club, a democratic organization which is thriving under her leadership. Jefferson Bell, a brilliant newspaper woman and contributor to the Miami Herald, giver her unstinted praise for her keen perception and judgment. In a sweet, well-modulated voice, the charming characteristic so well remembered in Mrs. Boykin, she announced to the members at a recent meeting that it was their club, and if affairs did not go to suit them to arise and say so, also inviting suggestions in club affairs.

Over 200 clubwomen sat down to breakfast and Mrs. Boykin, acting as toastmistress, kept the program from dragging, her savoir faire and sparkling introductions being prominent factors in the successful social phase, urging clubwomen to consecrate themselves anew to the work before the close of the breakfast.

Another Atlantan who has won social honors in the same tropical city is Mrs. Thomas Dunham, the former Miss Margaret Traylor, having been elected treasurer of the Miami Junior League, and on the strength of taking such an important part in its activities a lovely photograph of her was published in last Sunday's Herald.

Lord Byron, speaking of the Dance, calls it the "Muse of many twinkling feet." Well might he. There are rhythm and poetry in such dresses as these. And it is easy to imagine oneself a veritable sonnet in any one of them—a sonnet, or a waltz by Straus.

While they are composed of such materials as taffeta and tulle, satin and chiffon, theirs is the stuff that dreams are made of, and many a poem has arisen from the vision of lovely woman moving over the floor to the lilt of the dance in such a dress as any one of these.

League of Women Voters Makes Plans for Annual Meeting

At a meeting of the 1928 executive board of the Atlanta League of Women Voters called by Mrs. Alfred Bailey, newly-elected president, plans were discussed at length for the league's annual meeting next January and the date was set for Thursday and Friday, January 5 and 6.

Mrs. Harry Gershon accepted the chairmanship of arrangements and will have charge of the program, getting the place, and many other details. Mrs. R. E. Rollins, chairman of hospitality, will assist Mrs. Gershon.

The meeting will be in the form of a convention. The first session of the two-day meeting will be devoted to reports of the retiring officers. Mrs. R. L. Turman, the retiring president, will preside over this session and make her farewell address. The last session will be especially for the incoming officers and Mrs. Alfred Bailey, the new president, will preside, and the program of work for the year will be discussed.

A luncheon and a tea, special features of the meeting, are being worked out by the committee and details will be announced later.

At this same meeting the following directors were elected to office: Mrs. J. E. Springer as first vice president from the ninth ward; Mrs. Fred Hodgson, second vice president from the ninth ward; Mrs. R. E. Rollins, third vice president from the second ward; Mrs. J. E. Billups, fourth vice president, from the eighth ward; Mrs. W. C. Robinson, fifth vice president, from the sixth ward, and Mrs. A. W. Waldman, secretary, from the eighth ward.

At this same time, Mrs. Bailey announced the appointment of Miss Eleonore Raoul as executive director of the league for the coming year; Mrs. Charles W. Dillingham as chairman of finance; Mrs. George A. Matson as parliamentarian, and Mrs. Guy L. Sink, as chairman of the ward officers' council. Mrs. W. C. Robinson is the chairman of the program of work and Mrs. S. D. Halley will work with her as co-chairman.

Meetings are already being called by the new committee heads and ward leaders to map out their work for next year in order to start the new year out strongly organized and ready to work to accomplish bigger things than ever before.

Georgia League Plans Work.

The December board meeting of the Georgia League of Women was held at league headquarters Monday, December 5, and a number of important matters were decided on. A course in citizenship is to be furnished to all members-at-large; regular monthly letters are to be sent to this group as well as to local leagues and programs are to be available from headquarters for such leagues as may desire to use them.

Mrs. Emmett Quinn, chairman of the committee on women in industry, announced that she is prepared to furnish a program on her committee's work whenever needed.

Miss Mildred Manson, educational secretary of the Georgia Tuberculosis association, was made chairman of the social hygiene committee, the work of this committee including all phases of community health.

Mrs. S. D. Halley was appointe director of the league to succeed Mrs. M. R. Millis, who resigned this position to which she had recently been elected. A resolution of regret at Mrs. Millis' action was passed unanimously.

The league will issue a calendar appropriately marked to serve as a reminder for its members to enable them to bear in mind the seasons when it is time to register and vote, these dates being carried in red. These calendars will go to all league officers, including ward chairmen in Atlanta, and to all members-at-large. In addition to the dates they will carry appropriate league sentiments prepared by Mrs. R. L. Turman, chairman of citizenship education.

The Pilgrim, the official organ of the league, carries a Christmas greeting to all members and a symposium of sentiments gathered from prominent league officers and members throughout the state and from former members now living adjacent states. It is a most attractive holiday issue.

The date of the next annual convention was fixed for Thursday, Friday and Saturday, October 26, 27 and 28, 1928, in Decatur, as previously announced.

'A Penny a Day To Keep Drink Away' Georgia W.C.T.U. Slogan

BY M. FRANCES MEADORS BURGHARD.

"A penny a day to keep drink away," is a slogan for the Georgia Woman's Christian Temperance Union for the new year, and already members all over the state are asking their local treasurers to enroll them as penny-a-day members.

The penny-a-day idea originated with the state president, Mrs. Marvin Williams, of Atlanta, after an earnest member confessed to her that she had cried herself to sleep one night during the state convention in Savannah because she could not give $100 to the endowment fund for the permanent state headquarters.

When Mr. and Mrs. N. C. McPherson generously gave their Atlanta home for permanent state W. C. T. U. headquarters, it was stipulated that the W. C. T. U. should place $15,000 in a bank, the interest on which should be used for the maintenance of the property.

The gift of $500 to this fund makes one a founder and $100 makes the donor a builder. The names of founders and builders are to be preserved on a bronze tablet at the headquarters.

All who contribute to the headquarters fund will have their names placed in a book of remembrance, which will be kept for future generations to see. In addition there will be a special roll of honor for recording the systematic contributors, who volunteer to be "penny-a-day" members.

Mrs. Mary Harris Armor has already secured $10,000 of the endowment fund.

Penny a Day.

The penny a day will pay the $1 annual dues, and $1 on the budget for state work, also $1.65 as a contribution to the headquarters maintenance fund.

The unions everywhere in the state are getting ready for the annual roll call, which is to take place within the first two weeks in January.

Miss Fraser's Message.

Miss Charlotte Fraser, of New York city, national W. C. T. U. field secretary, who has recently completed an itinerary in Georgia, sends the following message to the members of the state W. C. T. U.: "Please let me express to you my deep appreciation for all you did to make my trip to Georgia a success. All along the line of service I found open hearts and open homes, high school, normal schools and colleges, both for white and colored, were reached.

"'Youth's day' with a special program in Columbus was perhaps the climax to the other fields of service.

"To all who in any way helped me, my hostesses, to Mrs. W. G. Cotton, who arranged my itinerary, and for all loving thought expressed to me, in so many ways, I thank you, and we will 'keep on working in the cause of right.' During my trip I traveled 2,677 miles, addressed 11,100 people, gave 42 addresses and secured 23 young people's branch members."

Eighth District Rally.

The rally of the eighth W. C. T. U. district was held in Athens Thursday, with Mrs. W. P. Perry, of Monroe, president of the district, presiding, and the state president, Mrs. Marvin Williams, of Atlanta, making the principal address of the occasion.

That prohibition is the best method of dealing with the liquor traffic was stressed in various ways by those participating. Of chief importance were the resolutions adopted.

The Athens W. C. T. U. was hostess at a luncheon, when the organizations of Athens were represented by T. W. Reed, University of Georgia; W. T. Forbes, Y. M. C. A. and Kiwanis club; Mrs. W. P. Warren, Baptist churches; Mrs. T. F. Green, Athen's Women's club; Mrs. J. Phil Campbell, P.-T. A. council; Mrs. A. S. Parker, Y. M. C. A.; Miss Moina Micheal, State Teachers' college; Rev. B. F. Mize, Methodist churches; Mrs. C. A. VerNooy, Presbyterian church, League of Women Voters and Red Cross; G. G. Bond, superintendent of the city schools.

Much credit for the success of the gathering was due to the intelligent efforts of the state director of health and social morality, Mrs. W. P. King, and the cooperation the members gave the officers of the Athens W. C. T. U.

Fifth District Meeting.

The fifth district W. C. T. U. held it quarterly meeting at Morningside Presbyterian church, Atlanta, with the large Druid Hills W. C. T. U. as hostess, Wednesday, Mrs. O. L. Taylor, the president, presiding.

Among the speakers were Rev. C. W. McMurray, Mrs. R. H. McDougall, who told of the unprecedented success attained by the children's department and plans for carrying it to larger proportions this year.

Daughters of 1812 Meeting Marked by Excellent Reports

The U. S. Georgia Daughters of 1812 met Friday at the Athletic club. The reports from all officers and chairmen showed splendid work being accomplished. Substantial contributions were made toward the Thomas Jefferson memorial, Wakefield, Old Ironsides, Friendship Hill and Carcassonne community center of Gander, Ky. This school was founded by and is the life work of Miss Dorothy Chandler, daughter of Mrs. J. D. Chandler, of Detroit, Mich. Mrs. Chandler is a national vice president and is state president of the U. S. D. of 1812 of Michigan.

Miss Marianne McClellan prepared and read a most instructive paper on Albert Gallatin, distinguished Swiss-American, from the time he came to America in 1780 to the date of his death. Her paper revealed that the treaty of Ghent was the special work of and a tribute to Albert Gallatin, whose home, "Friendship Hill," is located on a magnificent tract of land facing the Allegheny river. The restoration of "Friendship Hill" is of special interest to the society of the U. S. D. of 1812 and will be made an outstanding feature of the administration of Mrs. Samuel Z. Shope, president national.

Old Ironsides has sent forth her call to all Americans who are answering and repaying their just debt of gratitude to this famous ship, our foremost naval relic.

A contribution of money was made to be added to a Christmas fund which will bring comfort and cheer to the needy families of the Disabled American veterans. A report was made by Mrs. Patrick Bray, chairman of gift scholarships, on the work being done by the U. S. D. of 1812 scholarship pupils.

Mrs. H. Fay Gaffney, of Columbus, announced a medal to be given by her as a prize to the child in the public schools of Columbus who writes the best essay on "Old Ironsides." This is to be a gold medal to be given through the U. S. Georgia Daughters of 1812 at the close of this school term.

Appropriate resolutions written on the passing of two of the most valued and beloved members of the U. S. D. of 1812 were read and spread upon the minutes of the chapter, to Mrs. John Randolph Whitehead, of Albany, by Mrs. Charles F. Rice, Mrs. J. D. Weaver and Mrs. Lucius McConnell; to Mrs. Mary Brown Connally, by Mrs. Lucius McConnell and Mrs. Moreland Speer.

Suggestions for Safe Christmas Made by Safety Council

The child activities of the Atlanta Safety council has sent out to Parent-Teacher associations a bulletin offering the following suggestions for making this a safe Christmas: As the happy Christmas season approaches, thoughts naturally turn to children and to plans for making it a joyous time. What a splendid thing it would be if there were no accidents to bring sorrow and heartache to a single home this Christmas. The crowds and excitement bring unusual hazards, but almost all accidents are preventable. Just a little care will make this a safe Christmas for the children.

The child activities committee of the Atlanta Safety council offers the following suggestions:

1. Let's adopt the slogan this year "No candles on our Christmas tree." The pleasure afforded by candles is trifling when compared with the risk involved. The Camp Fire Girls offer the suggestion of using a living Christmas tree, and the Boy Scouts holding certificates for electrical training have volunteered to wire these trees without cost. A. A. Jameson, Boy Scout executive, states that even tips are not acceptable for this service, but is the Boy Scouts contribution towards a safe Christmas, a beautiful Christmas, and the conservation of the trees of the forest.

2. Be careful of overcrowded elevators. This constitutes a serious menace at this time. Teach children by example to enter and leave car only after it comes to a full stop; to step to back of car on entering, turn and face the door; to stand clear of the doorway, so no clothing can be caught in door or cables.

3. On rainy days hold umbrellas so it will not obstruct the view. Serious accidents to eyes have been caused by umbrellas held too low.

4. Obey traffic rules and regulations. The Boy Scouts are on duty for your added protection. Respect the rope barrier which they raise.

5. Use discretion in the selection of toys. Remember that the mite of the toy pistol and the firecracker is worse than the bark. Try substituting a safe plaything for the dangerous one.

6. Keep children with roller skates, coasters or wagons off the streets. Remember that the streets will be unusually crowded and danger from this source is great.

7. Cooperate with the citizenship chairmen in the making of good citizens of the children by respecting the laws. The good citizen will not permit the driving of an automobile by a child under age, as this shows a disregard of the law and teaches the child to become a law violator, and a disregard of one law encourages disregard for all law.

Luckie St. P.-T. A. Fathers' Meeting Is of Interest

The daddies' meeting, sponsored by the P.-T. A. of Luckie Street school Thursday evening in the school auditorium, was opened with prayer by Rev. J. S. Strickland, pastor of Payne Memorial church. Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of Atlanta public schools, spoke on cooperation, health, scholarship and character. He said, character is the habit of doing right, and that there must be a religious background for moral and religious education, with teachers and parents as examples and the home the safeguard. Mr. Sutton outlined a plan, whreby the boys and girls' time will be so full of good things there will be no time for the bad things, with the home, school and churches cooperating.

A feature of the meeting was a solo by S. M. Hastings, principal of O'Keefe Junior High school. The Christmas story from Luke was given by high six, low six and low five grades. Miss Ariene Thrasher, teacher of low two grade, sang "The Little Brown Owl."

Clarence Slate, a former pupil of Luckie Street school and a member of the board of education, was present and extended greetings. Children of high six, low six and low five grades sang "My Georgia Land." Count of parents gave first prize to Miss Thrasher's low two grade and second prize to Miss Bogus' low six grade.

Through the interest of this committee 1,000 children are provided with candy and sweets during Christmas week.

Tenth St. P.-T. A. Is Addressed By Willis A. Sutton

Superintendent Willis A Sutton addressed the daddies' meeting of the Tenth Street school Tuesday evening, December 6, in the school auditorium with 726 present. He first congratulated the school for making 100 per cent in teeth and health certificates, and paid high compliments to former students at Tenth street, who were now becoming leaders in Junior High school and in colleges. He mentioned the fact that Tenth Street was the only grammar school in America to erect a memorial monument to former students who gave their lives in the world war.

Using the slogan of the Atlanta school system, "Health-scholarship-character," he dwelt upon the subject of character, which he said should be stressed as never before in the history of the world and that it should be stressed from the cradle up. His definition of character was "getting in the habit of doing things right."

A splendid musical program was in charge of Mrs. Bache, director of the Atlanta Junior Club orchestra. The drummer, Charles Wood, seven-year-old scholar at Tenth, played two solo selections and delighted the audience. W. A. Fuller read a resolution to the effect that the school should be given an increase to 30 per cent of appropriation of city revenue instead of 26 per cent as at present. Resolution was passed.

The prize classes for having the most mothers and daddies present were: Miss Berman, low-one, 1; Miss Arnall, high 1; Mrs. Thompson, low 4; Mrs. Spencer, low-six, 2.

I. N. Ragsdale P.-T. A. Is Addressed By Mrs. R. R. Ritchie

"The right book for the right child at the right time" was the slogan Mrs. R. R. Ritchie gave to the I. N. Ragsdale P.-T. A. in her address on the "Value of a School Library," Wednesday afternoon. As chairman of children's reading, Mrs. Ritchie has had ample opportunity to observe the values of good reading for the pupils of the Atlanta schools. She explained a three-fold purpose of the library.

Mrs. Ritchie said in part that "the school library is to supplement the textbooks. In the condensed material sent out by headquarters it is impossible to present much more than facts and the school libraries offer a wealth of material," said Mrs. Ritchie. "The Atlanta educators are constantly urging the necessity of supplementing reading," said Mrs. Ritchie.

After Mrs. Ritchie's excellent talk Miss Frances Spahr, pupil of the school, immediately proposed a plan by which the school library could be enlarged. Miss Spahr suggested that five mothers would contribute small sums for the purchase of one book. In order to avoid duplication the parents should call on the children's teacher for suggestions in their selection of a book.

An urgent plea was made by Mrs. Gaston Haskine for donations of clothing and shoes for the Christmas party to be given by the better films committee for the needy children of the public schools. Mrs. Haskine requested that the donated articles be sent to Miss Spahr at the I. N. Ragsdale school not later than December 16. Realizing the need of Mrs. Haskine's committee the association voted $10 to be spent by the better films committee for the party.

The Parent-Teacher associations of the Atlanta schools are advocating the lighting of living Christmas trees for the celebration this year. Mrs. David E. Barnett suggested that by saving the life of a tree a lesson in forestry would be provided for the children. The Boy Scouts will be glad to light the trees to earn money for their troops and for their own Christmas.

Y. W. C. A. To Hold Vesper Service At Headquarters December 18

With the approach of Christmas all departments of the local Y. W. C. A. are concentrating all efforts towards activities in line with the season. W. headquarters, 37 Auburn avenue, with representatives from the several departments of the Y taking part in the beautiful ceremonial.

Mr. W. W. Hemminger, of All Saints' church, will tell the Christmas story, following which special music and Christmas carols will conclude the ceremony.

Mrs. H. H. Perry Heads Second District of Federated Clubs

Mrs. H. H. Perry, of Albany, was elected president of the second district federation at the sixteenth annual convention held in Moultrie December 2, with the Worthwhile club as hostess. Mrs. I. A. Heard, whom Mrs. Perry succeeded, presided. The other officers elected included Mrs. B. L. Holton, of Camilla, first vice president; Mrs. P. I. Dixon, of Thomasville, second vice president; Mrs. Urbannock, of Albany, corresponding secretary and treasurer, and Mrs. J. L. Dickerson, of Donalsonville, recording secretary. Boston was selected for next year's meeting. The sessions were held in the woman's clubrooms. Mrs. Perry was formerly president of Albany Woman's club.

Mrs. H. McDowell, president of the Worthwhile club, extended greetings from the hostess organization. Mrs. J. A. Horn, of Boston, district first vice president, responded. Mrs. Heard brought greetings to the convention from the district. Reports from the various clubs revealed that splendid work has been done throughout the district under the capable leadership of the district and local club officers.

"Federation hour" was observed. This was an innovation in the convention program. Seven three-minute talks were made by representatives from as many clubs, confined solely to federation work, and Mrs. E. L. McKinnon, of Boston, a former president of the second district, was accorded first place for making the best talk on federation work. Mrs. Peterson, of Tifton, was given second place and Mrs. Roy Barber, of Moultrie, third place.

The outstanding feature of the program was the message brought the convention by the state president, Mrs. A. P. Brantley, of Blackshear. Mrs. Brantley knows the Georgia federation and has her whole heart in the work. The keynote of her talk was "How to Develop Leadership by Contact With the Federation." Knowledge is power and to get true benefits from the federation, Mrs. Brantley stated, the clubwoman must first know the federation. She spoke of the power of the clubwoman in Georgia, of her influence in the home, on education and on the civic and religious life of the community. She touched on several phases of federation work, particularly on the work of the Tallulah Falls school and the Ella F. White foundation.

As a courtesy to Mrs. Brantley the Worthwhile club presented her with a beautiful bouquet of lavender and yellow chrysanthemums at the close of her address. At noon the visitors were entertained at a seated luncheon at the Country club. Mrs. J. B. Coyle, of Moultrie, rendered an original poem as an expression of appreciation to the retiring officers.

Mrs. A. P. Brantley Is Honor Guest Of Winder Club

Mrs. A. P. Brantley, of Blackshear, president of Georgia Federation, was honor guest of the Winder Woman's club, and following a luncheon held in November at the hotel. The exercises were held in the Methodist church, and the president, Mrs. A. D. McCurry, introduced the distinguished guest of the club, Mrs. A. P. Brantley, who gave a most interesting and helpful address on "The Development of Leadership Through Knowing Their Federation."

She said in part: "It is the duty of every member of the Woman's club to know the duties, privileges and workings of all departments of club life. Knowledge is power. Each woman should know the work of her district, with all its officers, the state federation and its officers, and the general federation as well as her own local club and its work." She gave intimate glimpses of some of the state officers and the great work they are doing. She also spoke of the various funds maintained by the Georgia Federation. She said the student aid fund of $40,000 had already helped 328 students in their struggle for an education.

The Ella F. White Memorial fund cares for the expenses, in a measure, of the state federation. It is hoped that this fund will be so enlarged as to be adequate for this great work.

The special pride of the Georgia clubwomen is the Tallulah Falls school, the buildings and equipment of which are worth at least $100,000. There are at present 109 boarding students and 100 day students in this fine school.

Mrs. Brantley spoke of her service of one and a half years as state president, and expressed her appreciation for the loyal support she had enjoyed from the women of Georgia, and her gratitude for the warm friendships she had found in the course of her arduous work.

The Choral club rendered a musical number. Three new members were received into the club, Mrs. Broadus Williams, Mrs. Pearl Oldham and Mrs. Preston Williams.

Mrs. Quarterman, of the building committee, reported the progress of that work. The finance committee spoke of plans to canvass the membership of the club for subscriptions for the building fund, and asked for generous support from all club members.

The membership committee of the club was read: Mrs. H. H. Colvard, Mrs. Oscar Summerour and Mrs. C. S. Williams.

On vote of the club, it was decided to elect the advisory committee to the building committee by ballot of the club, and the following five gentlemen were elected: Roy Jackson, R. I. Rogers, C. M. Ferguson, J. C. Pratt and Dr. G. W. DeLaPerriere. This committee will assist the Woman's club committee in their plans for the erection of a clubhouse on the fine lot recently given by N. J. Kelly for this purpose.

Blackshear Woman's Club To Have Rooms In Community House

Blackshear Woman's club, of which the state president, Mrs. A. P. Brantley is a member, is justly proud of the honor recently accorded it by the fraternal organizations of the city, in the newly-completed community house, which is one of the most commodious, beautifully built and conveniently arranged buildings of the kind to be found in a town the size of Blackshear. These organizations have included a room especially planned to be the permanent home of the Woman's club. This room with its built-in bookcases, hardwood floor and well arranged lighting fixtures is very attractive. Plans are under way for furnishing the room in keeping with its architectural style and fine quality of workmanship. The room is designated on the outside by a handsome tablet of Georgia marble, bearing the inscription, Woman's club, organized 1910.

Blackshear Woman's club is unique in that so far as is known no other club in Georgia shares the interest and cooperates in the expense of a community house as does this club. That the work of the Woman's club merits the recognition of these organizations to this extent reflects the value of the work of the Woman's club in this community, and causes the members to feel a pardonable pride in their accomplishments, and adds to their desire for greater achievements. In January the club will hold its first meeting in its new quarters with the other women's organizations of the city as specially invited guests, at which time an appropriate program will be presented with Mrs. A. P. Brantley, president of Georgia federation, as the principal speaker.

National Organizations Take Part in Peace Plans.

Nine national organizations with an estimated membership of 10,000,000 women will cooperate in the third national conference on the cause and cure of war at the Hotel Washington, Washington, D. C., from January 15 to 19, in an effort to frame a definite program for world peace.

The national organizations which will cooperate in the meeting are the American Association of University Women, Council of Women for Home Missions, Federation of Woman's Boards of Foreign Missions of North America, General Federation of Women's Clubs, National Council of Jewish Women, National League of Women Voters; National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, National Board of Young Women's Christian Temperance Union, National Board of Young Women's Christian Associations, National Women's Trade Union league.

Fifth District Chairman of Homes Presents Her Plans

Mrs. L. O. Freeman, chairman of the division of homemaking of the fifth district, presents her plans and ideals for the work of this division. The department of American homes was created by Mrs. Sherman, president of the national federation. This branch of club endeavor is strongly emphasized by both Mrs. Sherman and Mrs. Brantley, Georgia president, in their plans and recommendations for the work of the federation in its program of service and efficiency, in Georgia and in the national federation. The department will be given local stress by Mrs. Kate Hess, newly-elected president of the fifth district, in her outline of work, and by Mrs. Newton Wing, American homes chairman for the district.

Mrs. Freeman, whose especial duty it is to exercise a supervision over the homemaking division of this department, points out the fact that better and happier home environment would be the strongest possible ally in the checking of juvenile crime, which is probably the greatest problem of the present time. That Atlanta is confronted with an amazing increase in crime among its young people was brought out by the recent presentments of the grand jury. During the past year the juvenile court of Atlanta has officially tried 2,175 boys and girls, and an equal or greater number were dealt with by officers out of court, making more than 4,000 juvenile offenders for the year. These figures point accusingly to an appalling deficiency in approximately 4,000 Atlanta homes. Deficient home surroundings, careless and indifferent parents are more largely responsible for this criminal tendency than are the boys and girls themselves. The place of development for the young is preeminently in the home, and many a youth goes astray because of the lack of smiles, sunshine and flowers in the place he calls home.

The art of homemaking is the most important art of the times. Working on this basis, Mrs. Freeman asks that every club in the district appoint a chairman and give an important place on the year's schedule to homemaking, and to the study of those arts that will make of a house a place of comfort, happiness and of mental and spiritual uplift that may be truly designated a home.

—MRS. L. O. FREEMAN.

Mrs. Richardson To Attend Conference

Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, director for Georgia in the Genarel Federation of Women's Clubs has been extended an invitation to visit Washington, D. C., as a delegate to the third conference on "Cause and Cure of War," meeting January 16, in Hotel Washington and continuing through January 19.

Claxton Woman's Club Elects Mrs. Majors.

Claxton Woman's club has begun its fourth year, with the following as officers: President, Mrs. Robert Majors; vice president, Mrs. J. C. Edwards; recording secretary, Mrs. R. J. Kennedy; corresponding secretary, Mrs. R. M. Girardeau; parliamentarian, Mrs. P. H. Perkins; auditor, Mrs. G. E. Donaldson.

The following chairmen were named at the November meeting:

Civic, Mrs. D. C. Newton; finance, Mrs. S. M. Hall; literary, Mrs. B. E. Miller; library, Mrs. R. H. Burroughs; program, Mrs. J. C. Edwards; social, Mrs. R. O. Barnes; home economics, Mrs. Henry Roach; music, Mrs. R. M. Girardeau; membership and attendance, Mrs. W. L. Newton; charity, Mrs. R. J. Kennedy; publicity, Mrs. C. C. DeLoach.

The club sponsors a bazar December 9-10, and expects the proceeds to greatly enlarge its funds. Since the work is greatly handicapped by not having a home the membership are planning to work towards securing a lot and adding to a clubhouse fund.

Several members attended the first district convention held in November at Waynesboro, and heard Mrs. A. P. Brantley, beloved state president, address the convention, and at the last meeting it was decided to make greater efforts to aid the federation work more, due to inspiration received by hearing Mrs. Brantley and Mrs. Ottley and others.

Mrs. R. M. Girardeau being the newly elected treasurer of the district, is a member of the Claxton Woman's club.

Mrs. Brantley Names New Chairmen.

Mrs. A. P. Brantley announces the following appointments: Mrs. W. B. Smith, of Tennille, Ga., to be chairman of literature and club programs, to succeed Mrs. Homer Williams, who has been appointed recording secretary of Georgia federation. Mrs. J. W. Gholston, of Comer, Ga., to be the chairman of library extension, to succeed Mrs. Ralph Northcutt, who resigned on account of illness.

Mrs. Price Is Hostess To Harlem Club.

The Harlem Woman's club held its November meeting at the home of Mrs. J. M. Price, presided over by Mrs. Sara Bell Fox, the recording secretary. Mrs. C. W. Davisson acted as secretary. A rising vote of thanks was given to the civic and park committees, Mrs. John Lamkin, chairman, for the good work being done at the town park, notably the construction of the rock pillars at the entrance.

Mrs. L. M. Conner was in charge of the program given to observing appreciation week and Thanksgiving day. Mrs. Fox read an editorial on "Friendship" by J. J. Harris, and an "Appreciation of Friendship," by W. T. Wynn. Mrs. Hugh S. Paschal gave a talk on "Plymouth," the hard ship of the Pilgrims, their first Thanksgiving day, and the present modern town of Plymouth, ending her talk with reading from Longfellow's description of the voyage of the pilgrams. Mrs. Hulon O. Hatcher read a "Thanksgiving Prayer," written by Margaret E. Sangster. By special request, Mrs. Glenn S. Phillips repeated the three-minute talk on the "Scope of the Federation" given at the recent meeting of the tenth district federation at Louisville. Mrs. Conner suggested that the program be closed with the singing of the Doxology, as nothing could be more fitting for Thanksgiving day, or for appreciation week. Mrs. Price, assisted by Misses Ruth and Pauline Brown, served refreshments.

Mrs. A. P. Brantley's Greetings To New District Presidents

To the District Presidents, Greetings:

Nine of the district meetings brought new members into the official family of Georgia federation. The third, ninth and twelfth districts reelected their presidents.

To each and all of these officers I extend a cordial welcome, with the hope that our work together may be of great value to the federation, and with the assurance that it will be my great pleasure to serve them in any way at all times. I am,

Sincerely,
ELLA F. BRANTLEY (Mrs. A. P. Brantley),
President Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs.

Mrs. Cate Makes Presentation Gavel Speech To Clubwomen

Mrs. S. V. Cate, of Brunswick, president of the eleventh, in presenting a gavel to each president attending the recent district convention held in Brunswick, made this speech:

"When the Woman's club of Brunswick offered to donate the gavel for the use of our district president, the question arose as to which of our many interesting historic trees should furnish the wood. It so happened that public attention just at this time was focused on the matter of rebuilding the frigate Constitution, better known as Old Ironsides. The people of Brunswick have always had a special place in their hearts for this famous ship due to the fact that the first tree felled for the building of the ship was taken from Cannon's Point, the plantation of John Couper, on St. Simon's island, and shipped from there to Boston, where the vessel was built.

Mr. Coffin's Offer.

"Howard E. Coffin, being intensely interested in all matters pertaining to coastal Georgia, and knowing of the connection this section had with the building of Old Ironsides, offered to furnish the necessary timbers for the rebuilding of the vessel. The offer was accepted and live oak trees suitable for the purpose were cut from Retreat plantation on St. Simons island, which has been the home of James Spalding, William Page, Thomas Butler King and is now the property of Mr. Coffin. Through the kindness of Mr. Coffin's local representative, Paul Varner, the committee from our club secured sufficient wood from the same trees which were being converted into timbers for the rebuilding of Old Ironsides to make a gavel for the district and one for each individual club in the district. It is quite fitting that the gavels to be used by our clubs should be made from this wood and, in this connection, there is an interesting bit of history that I want to tell you.

"When George Washington was inaugurated as the first president of the United States he found no navy and many thought there was no need for a navy. However, our rapidly growing merchant marine began to suffer at the hands of the pirates from the northern coast of Africa.

In 1785 two vessels had been captured and 21 American sailors were held in slavery by the dey of Algiers. In accordance with the well established practice of European nations, an attempt was made to ransom the poor captives who had been set at hard labor. The government authorized their agents to treat with the dey for the liberation of the captives but the sum allowed was too small and nothing was accomplished. Considering the promptness with which the army and navy of today would be sent to protect any American citizen who might be mistreated by a foreign government, it is appalling to know that these men were held year after year by pirates and congress did nothing. In 1790 President Washington sent a message to congress on the subject and again in 1792, when he suggested a plan for obtaining the release of the captives by the payment of $90,000, which congress approved but the dey refused. In 1793 eleven American ships and 106 American sailors were captured. Petitions from the captives and from masters of sailing vessels who feared capture, were sent to congress. Many of the captives had prayed through eight years of hard labor and yet congress was not in favor of building a navy.

The building of six vessels was finally authorized by a compromise directing the discontinuance of the work on them in case the treaty should be arranged and the captives released before the completion of the vessels. In June, 1795, a treaty of peace was signed with Algiers and the captives were redeemed at a cost of practically a million dollars. Work was stopped on the vessels. Washington's message to congress in 1796 stated that neutrality was not sufficient protection and urged the completion of the ships of the navy, which congress authorized. The Constitution was the third ship to be launched (October, 1797) and from the first was thought by the men of the navy to be a "lucky" ship. No ship of our navy has seen more action and her victories did much to build up among the American people a feeling of pride and respect. More than any other symbol which our country has, she has stood for freedom of the seas.

Made From Live Oaks.

"These gavels, which the Woman's club, of Brunswick, would give to the eleventh district and to the sister clubs of the district, are not beautiful in the ordinary sense of the word; they have no ornate pattern, no silver bands or trimmings; they are made from the strongest wood known to the builder—the live oak, with its peculiar grain which follows no pattern but curls in and out like the hairs of a woman's head. Built from the same tree, they are indeed a part of Old Ironsides—the ship that came into being to render service to humanity—to release Christian captives from slavery under Barbary pirates, and it is indeed fitting that these gavels should be held by our clubs which are organized and dedicated to the service of humanity."

Good Roads Chairman Issues Open Letter To State Clubwomen

Mrs. J. M. Patterson, Albany, state chairman of good roads and highways, brings a message to Georgia clubwomen on ways to help bring about good roads for Georgia and for beautifying those already completed. Mrs. Patterson and her husband have for years studied and worked for civic and agricultural improvement in their adopted state and Mrs. Patterson took up the work as chairman of division of good roads and highways with enthusiasm when appointed last year at the Albany convention, where, as president of the Albany club, she was hostess to the convention.

Encouraging Trip.

"As chairman of the division of roads and highways for the State Federation of Women's Clubs, permit me to say that a recent trip from Albany to Atlanta by motor was a most encouraging one to me. While we had a number of stretches of rough roads, they were practically all detours necessary because of road paving or grading. We went to Atlanta via one route and returned via an entirely different route from Griffin south. Fortunately it was dry weather, for to me there is nothing more terrifying than the Georgia red clay and the detours would be dangerous. I can recall a few years ago when many of our most progressive citizens insisted that a Georgia sand-clay road was good enough for anybody. I always had a feeling that most of those so insistent had had little or no experience traveling over those beautiful and smooth dry-weather roads during or after a hard rain. Georgia has had much unfavorable publicity because of her dangerous clay roads, but we are fast becoming educated to the comfort as well as the economy and advantage of paved roads for ourselves. With good roads much of our community life, and especially our rural life, is changed; good schools, encouragement of farm settlement, prosperity, awakening of community life and friendly intercourse with all sections of the United States follow.

"The permanent paving programs in the United States, the present arrangement whereby the federal government will pay 50 per cent of county paving projects if county and state will duplicate the amount, is doing much to make possible permanent road programs throughout the state where counties are able to do their share, but it makes a patchwork of our state roads. So long as Georgia has not approved a state bond issue for roads which would help us to link up paved counties into a through highway, we do hope the unpaved counties on the through routes will soon find it possible to pave their respective counties.

"Our state federation is back of every recognized effort for the improvement of our beautiful state and, as improved social, health and education follow so closely the improved road programs, we urge that every district president make a most urgent appeal for road and highway programs in clubs in her district. Where roads in counties are not paved we want to urge that clubwomen in such counties cooperate with road and highway commissioners, putting on publicity campaigns in local papers where possible and, if roads in counties are paved, that the road and highway chairman in clubs put on an active planting and beautifying campaign to improve the highways. A good road is all right, but it must be maintained and be beautiful as well as useful; but unless your paving program is finished it is useless to attempt any permanent beautification of the highway.

Beautify the Highways.

"Following the paving and beautification of the highway, beautifying and improving the property fronting the highway will follow. Good roads and highways are so closely allied to all departmental work of our federation that I hope our clubs throughout the state will investigate thoroughly the local and county roads and put on an interesting and instructive program. In our county, Dougherty, we are happy to say we have a permanent paved highway through the county, and our Albany Woman's club has cooperated with other organizations in beautifying the highways. Beautifying a highway is the work of several years and it is desirous that permanent improvements be made. We planted crepe myrtle and dogwood trees on the north end of our highway hoping to gradually add the beautiful evergreen magnolia trees to this planting to match the miles of magnolia trees already planted to the south of our county. Appoint a chairman who will consult with your county road commissioners and urge their cooperation in your road and highway programs.

"One thing clubwomen in a community can do is to see that detour signs are plainly written and placed where tourists can easily follow the detours. Many times and places the detour signs are so few and far between that it makes the detour hard to follow. This does not sound important, but travel as a stranger in a district, as I know many of you have, where detours are poorly marked and you not only take your time but annoy people along the line of the detour asking for instructions and frequently get on the wrong road entirely. Clubwomen can and should look after this matter as well as give publicity on programs to the keeping of trash off the highways adjacent to their own property.

"I am writing to the district presidents in whose districts at the present time there are unpaved counties, to ascertain what the paving program is to be, if any, in their county this year, and trust in my next communication to the club page in The Constitution to have an interesting report to make."

Cedartown Woman's Club Gives Sums To Worthy Charities

Cedartown Woman's club has to its credit a number of stimulating activities, and responds with alacrity to every worthy cause. Its list includes ten dollars sent to the Florida sufferers; Miss Phillips, county demonstration agent, was given money for one scholarship at the State Normal; scales were purchased to be used by schools, thus promoting our health project; purchased kindergarten chairs for two first grade rooms; an additional sewing machine has been purchased and placed in the domestic department of the high school; the club served refreshments free to those attending the county fair, given by club girls under the direction and supervision of Miss Phillips; the 1926 Christmas bazaar resulted in $417.83; the woman's club sponsored the T. B. stamp sale. $75.11 worth of stamps were sold; the club paid half the expense of building bath houses ($750) at the Kiwa pool.

Christmas gifts were sent to people at the State sanitarium at Milledgeville; the club interested itself in the home life of the colored people, offering prizes for the best kept home and premises; in September the Woman's club gave a reception in honor of Mrs. Fitzpatrick, of Madison, who gave interesting information concerning our work at Tallulah Falls.

Three bridge parties have been given which added $159.61 to the treasury; $10 paid to the student aid fund and $10 to the Ella White Memorial fund; at the county fair the club cooperated with the county demonstration agent, Miss Phillips, in earning money by selling articles at various booths. Our share of the profits was $41; $166 was given to the Ethel Harpst Home building.

Mrs. Charles B. McGarity, district president, was its guest in October, the club giving a reception in her honor.

Mrs. Brantley Named Delegate to Conference

Mrs. A. P. Brantley has been appointed by Mrs. John D. Sherman as a delegate from the General Federation to attend the third conference on the "Cause and Cure of War," held in Washington January 16 to 19 in the Washington hotel.

The conference opens Sunday evening with a buffet supper and closes with a banquet Thursday evening. The Sunday evening program will be of special interest, as it is expected that the secretaries of the departments of state, war and navy will be the speakers.

Mrs. Kate Green Hess, president Fifth District Federation of Women's Clubs, acknowledges receipt of the program for the Wednesday Morning Study club and of the year book of the Rhododendron club.

Mrs. Richardson Makes Urgent Plea for Sanitarium Inmates

BY MRS. ALONZO RICHARDSON, Director for Georgia in the General Federation.

As the Christmas season draws near, there comes to mind one phase of the federation work about which little is said, but which is now one of its most outstanding and beautiful things. At the sanitarium in Milledgeville there are about 3,500 unfortunates, who are dependent wholly on the women of the state for their Christmas cheer. These men and women are remembered, each one by name, each one with a beautifully wrapped package intended for that one alone, and so labeled, for it is the gift of a friend. Mrs. Walraven has for years gone to the sanitarium some time in advance, has asked each one what he or she wishes, and at great pains has transcribed these expressed wishes, listed them and distributed these names to the clubwomen throughout the state. Every inmate is remembered, and when one considers the nature of the requests, it is to feel that to bring some measure of happiness into the lives of these, is a rare privilege.

This year the fourth district is doing some very lovely things. Besides the gifts asked for, they are sending a victrola and many other gifts. Mrs. Alonzo Richardson's Sunday school class, (the only federated Sunday school class, by the way) has for years taken 100 of these names and next Sunday will see a gala afternoon in her class room at St. Mark's church. It will be the afternoon to pack the things for Battle Hill sanitarium, for the two girls this class keeps at Vashti school, and for those in Milledgeville who will be remembered. Such requests as snuff, tobacco, cigarettes, handkerchiefs, candy, and in that one which comes for a doll, from Mrs. "So and So," ward "so and so," one reads the tragedy of loss of the little one which has resulted in this condition. If you want real joy, call Mrs. Walraven, get a hundred names, she still has some, and give yourself the pleasure of providing for these. It is a little thing, for the gifts should not be expensive ones, but it is "unto the least of these," and the joy and the blessing which follow are far greater than the effort made.

Uncle Remus Association Celebrates J. C. Harris' Birthday

The annual meeting and celebration of the birthday of Joel Chandler Harris was observed December 9 at the Atlanta Woman's club. The business session was called to order by the president, Mrs. A. McDermott Wilson, at 10:30 o'clock. The annual report of all the officers was called for, the results showing the association to have reached the highest point in the history of its activities embracing a period of 18 years. The property in the home site of Mr. Harris, including "Snap Bean Farm" and the "Wren's Nest," have been bought and paid for; and in the present year through the generosity of the county commissioners the home has been thoroughly renovated, making a fitting memorial to a truly great man.

Mrs. Hale's Report.

The report of Mrs. Arthur Hale, hostess at the Wren's Nest, gives a concrete idea of the work at the home. During the past year 1,345 visitors have registered there from all parts of the country. Mrs. Brevard Montgomery, chairman of the May festival, reported a most successful affair in 1927 with plans already made for next year. Mrs. George Hope announced it would be presented on a concrete stage, the gift of the county commissioners.

The nominating committee, Mrs. J. S. Nichols, Mrs. Ramond O'Kelly and Mrs. Banks Whiteman submitted the following slate, which was unanimously accepted by the body: President, Mrs. A. McDermott Wilson; first vice president, Mrs. Hal Hentz; second vice president, Mrs. H. G. Hastings; third vice president, Mrs. Warren D. White; recording secretary, Mrs. Brevard Montgomery; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Spencer Atkinson; treasurer, Mrs. Arthur Hazzard; assistant treasurer, Mrs. T. T. Stevens; historian, Mrs. R. T. Connally; auditor, Mrs. J. F. Purser. It was with great regret the resignation of Mrs. Fred Stewart as third vice president was accepted. Mrs. Stewart is making her home in Little Rock and a telegram from the association was sent to her, also to Mrs. Hal Hentz, the newly-elected first vice president, whose husband had recently lost his foot in an accident. A message of love was also sent to Mrs. Joel Chandler Harris. Mrs. H. G. Hastings told of presenting the portrait of Mr. Harris to Ponce de Leon Avenue school and the joy of the children in its possession. Mrs. B. O. Branyan, through the courtesy of the Georgian, secured the gift of Mr. Harris' portrait to the Uncle Remus Memorial association. A copy of this picture was presented to every public school in the city of Atlanta, Decatur and Fulton county. Mrs. Wilson, in behalf of the association, thanked Mrs. Branyan and the Georgian for this splendid gift.

Luncheon Follows.

Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith and Fred Paxon were presented, after which the meeting adjourned to reassemble in the club dining room for luncheon. Covers were laid for 75 guests. Mrs. Wilson presided, giving a brief resume of the work of the association. Mrs. Wilson is life president, being the first and only one to hold this office. For 18 years she has served faithfully and efficiently, recognizing no obstacles, knowing no such word as failure. She introduced her corps of officers with well chosen words of appreciation for the service each had rendered. She introduced Fred Paxon, who acted as toastmaster. He introduced the following speakers: Mrs. Lucian Lamar Knight, Mrs. I. N. Ragsdale, George Hope, W. B. Stewart, Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, Mrs. Norman Sharp, William Edwards, of The Georgian; L. Q. Ball, Lucian Harris, Miss Gray, Mrs. Bryan Collier, Mrs. Spencer Atkinson, Mrs. G. H. Brandon, Mrs. B. R. Blackburn, Fred Houser, all of whom paid brief tribute to Mr. Harris' memory.

The outstanding address was made by Professor Willis Sutton, who spoke of the creative genius of Mr. Harris, a man who took two of the humblest of God's creatures, the negro and the rabbit, and gave them a personality and wove around them the stories that live in the hearts of men, women and little children. He visualized a dream that some day the city of Atlanta would erect on "Snap Bean Farm" a marble memorial showing "Uncle Remus" and "Little Boy" and all the "wild critters" grouped around; back of them with outspread arms would stand the likeness of Joel Chandler Harris, Georgia's illustrious and glorified son.

All the things a well-dressed woman uses help to create a charming picture. But whether you wear a cloth coat or sable, the basis of a lovely toilette rests largely in the right face cream and powder foundation. Be sure you make no mistake in the cream and powder you use together. Certain influences of modern life (the movies, for instance) have their equalizing effects. The wealthy woman now shares with her less fortunate sister various beautifiers which have become well standardized. It's good sense nowadays to use the articles you find the best rather than those which cost most. In the cosmetic field this means Edna Wallace Hopper's toiletries, which represent the last word in quality and purity.

Her creams come in two types—cold and vanishing. They can be found on any toilet counter. The "cold" type is rightly balanced to soothe and beautify. The "vanishing" type is for the oily skin. They cleanse to the depths and either forms a perfect base for the powder.

You will be delighted with the finished and velvety smoothness of your skin when you apply Edna Wallace Hopper's Face Powder over the Youth Cream foundation. The round box contains the light type of fine texture, yet clinging, sold at a low price. There is also the square box, with the heavy, cold cream type, which costs a dollar a box. This is more suitable for the skin which does not retain powder easily. Both come in three shades: Flesh, brunette and white.

Guarantee: Your money back if any Hopper Cosmetic does not convince you of its superior merit.

ALL my life I have felt a sort of pity for the woman faced with the problem of selecting an appropriate Christmas gift for a man—but I learned last week that the solution to this complexity is as simple as "two and two."

With the possible exception of his dog, there's nothing that the average man loves like his pipe or his smoking paraphernalia. Equip him elaborately in this line and he will get more pleasure out of wooing Lady Nicotine than any other hobby of pursuit—and, fortunately, this is the kind of wooing that arouses no jealousy.

The Royal Cigar Company, at the corner of Forsyth and Walton streets, is a veritable treasure house of men's Christmas gifts. It offers the largest assortment of beautiful pipes I have ever seen, these ranging from gorgeous creations in Meerschaum through Dunhills, Calabashes, Ben Wades, Petersons, Comoys, Milanos and Kaywoodies, and, in addition, there are charming pipe sets that make ideal remembrances.

There are metal cigarette cases ranging in price from 50 cents to sterling cases at $18; leather cigarette cases, and cigarette sets, including lighters and all the accessories of the smoking den.

The pipes range in price from $1 each to $25 in plush lined cases, and cigarette holders ranging from $1 to $12 in plush cases.

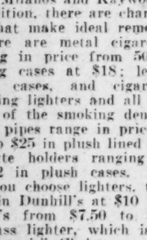

If you choose lighters, they're offered in Dunhill's at $10 to $25, in Clarke's from $7.50 to $15. The Douglass lighter, which is featured in "Vogue's" Christmas number as an ideal Christmas gift, ranges in price from $5 to $12.50. Too, there are other style lighters as low as $2.

There are cigarette jars as low as 50c up to $5, which incide 100 imported Shepherd cigarettes featured by Dunhill. There are cigarette humidors as low as $2 and as high as $7.50 in genuine mahogany. There are desk lighters at $4.50 and finer Dunhill desk lighters at $15.

In other gifts there are flasks, tobacco pouches and a variety of handsome and useful gifts that would delight his heart.

Don't make the mistake that hundreds of women make every Christmas by getting something that might appeal to a woman but that a man would not want and would just have to say that he liked it and then put it away to lay there forgotten, but go to a man's store such as the Royal Cigar Store, corner of Forsyth and Walton streets, and let the obliging clerks assist you in selecting a gift that would really delight a man's heart and make him feel that you have tried to give him a present that he would appreciate and enjoy.

THE fact that the Howard Hat Shop, with Mrs. Tinzley and Mrs. Woodruff in charge, are now a part of the well-known Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Company, will be of interest to the smart women of Atlanta, for the Howard Hat Shop has long been recognized as one of the best and most fashionable Millinery Salons in the city.

As the women of Paris feel that to be smart their cheapeaus must be made on the head by Rebeaux, there are women in Atlanta that feel that they are not well dressed unless they have their hats made on the head by the Howard Hat Shop. For they, like Rebeaux, fashion hats on the head to suit the personality of the wearer. They also have a beautiful line of imported hats of every description to suit the taste of the most fastidious.

HAVE you ever wished for one of those old-fashioned fruit cakes, the kind that you ate when you were a little girl and that you remember as one of the most delicious morsels of food you have ever tasted?

Mrs. M. J. Turner in Marietta makes just such cakes, old-fashioned fruit cakes as well as white fruit cakes.

She makes the famous Mary Jones pickles and jellies, and for Christmas she will prepare a dainty basket tied with a fluffy red ribbon bow and filled with the Mary Jones delicacies, each tiny jar being wrapped in Christmas paper. This would make an ideal gift. The baskets range in price from $7.50 to $25. Mrs. Turner can be reached by calling MArietta 435.

A brown suede envelope bag with a beige moire lining and metal top is ideal for the smart young miss.

MR. RICH says: We reware those few new inches.

The latest method of rewaving enables Mr. Rich to wave your hair time and time again with absolute safety, with the comforting assurance that your hair will remain always soft and lustrous. Mr. Rich knows the individual requirements of hair, and when he re-permanent waves the virgin hair he strictly confines the new wave to the newly-grown straight hair and avoids double-waving the remains of the old permanent.

This is accomplished by putting the waving fluid only on the new hair and by means of the perforated rewave sachet and the Eugene Two-Section Steamer.

Mr. Rich will set your permanent and finger wave it as only he or his assistants can do. Make an appointment today for your Christmas wave before the holiday rush. Artistic Bob Shop, Jacobs' Main Store at Five Points, WA. 7875.

THIS charming slipper can be seen at the Mirror. It is of brown kid with a strap at the instep fastened by a buckle of bronze.

The lines of this shoe are graceful and smart, giving the foot a dainty slenderizing effect. Such shoes as you see on the dainty feet of smartly dressed women who give much thought to the necessity of having their feet well shod and in keeping with the rest of their costume, for a perfect ensemble depends greatly upon the shoes worn and should you fail to have just the correct shoe the costume is incomplete.

This adorable little shoe, "Rascall," is very flattering to the foot and for the chic modern miss who delights in the individuality of the new art in footwear, the Mirror presents an incomparable collection of the advanced styles in shoes.

For dancing there is a one-strap pump displayed by the Mirror Shoe Department, such a shoe as you see on the dainty dancing feet of the chic young misses of the smart world. No shoes show a beautiful instep to better advantage than shoes purchased at the Mirror.

IN THIS modern era in which we live there are so many wonderful new interests to intrigue one's fancy and encourage the spending of the money one has saved, money that is the fruit of hard labor and seems to slip through one's fingers and melt away. We all should give a thought to the future and the day when we will want to feel secure in the knowledge that we have enough to rid our minds of the worry of making a livelihood. The thing to do is to invest your money and know that you have safely invested it. The best possible way to accomplish this end is to invest in good first mortgage on real estate that will net you from 7 to 8 per cent.

Realizing the necessity of the proper investment of savings, why not consult Bayne Gibson Mortgage Company, with offices in the Hurt building? You can absolutely depend upon their integrity in all transactions. Service is their chief desire and satisfaction is a certainty.

A maximum return on funds invested appeals to all investors; likewise do safety and security. The first is desirable and the second is necessary. Investments in loans on Atlanta and Decatur real estate give you both. Why not consult Bayne Gibson Mortgage Company today, for they are one of the most reliable firms in Atlanta and a firm having many years of successful business.

SCENES of French Colonial days are brought to mind by a visit to the Akins Furniture company showroom, 262 Peachtree, where the ultra-new imported lamps decorated with French prints are on display.

These lamps are a combination of beauty, art and utility which is seldom found at such a surprisingly moderate price.

Ruth

Un Mot Ici Est Bien

By Mrs. J. J. Harris, Editor, Ga. Div. U. D. C.

Georgia's second allotted niche in Statuary hall, the hall of fame in Washington is now filled. And Georgia's enthusiastic delegation which made the pilgrimage to witness the unveiling of the statue of Alexander Stephens, has felt the urge of patriotism pulsating from the east to the west. The Empire State of the South has every reason to feel the surge of pride over the honor done her immortal son whose records of gallantry blazon forth such glorious history—and for the noble woman, Mrs. J. M. High, through whose generosity the gift was made possible. The Atlanta chapter U. D. C. which was made the medium of the gift is to be congratulated upon having a member, whose great-heartedness has placed her state in the spot light of patriotic publicity.

There is a most refreshing self-effacement which renders Mrs. High's personality particularly pleasing—and in view of the many well-deserved tributes and the adulation which have been placed at her feet she is delightfully unique when asked how she conceived the idea which has brought such fame to her state she said:

"Not long ago a party of strangers was being conducted through the Capitol in Washington, coming to the hall of fame the guide described the interesting statues given by the various states, by explaining that 20 years ago congress had given Georgia the honor of placing the statues of her two most distinguished sons in the hall of fame. Georgia was the only state which had failed to do her duty. That was bitter medicine but we took it and passed on——" and thus it seems that the seed planted by this guide in the capitol took root in the fertile brain of Mrs. High—and enriched by the generosity of her spirit and nourished by the purity of her patriotism the little seed planted so carelessly by an indifferent guide, came forth unto the world, flourished under the love and consideration accorded its development and today stands an everlasting monument to one of the greatest heroes of the Confederacy.

Mrs. Horace Holden, chairman of the Alexander Stephens Institute at Crawfordville, was appointed by the division president, Mrs. W. Trox Bankston, chairman of the Georgia delegation from the U. D. C. to attend the unveiling and to place wreathes on the statue of Alexander Stephens and the Confederate monument at Arlington. Mrs. Holden, who is a niece of Alexander Stephens, was accompanied by her husband, Judge Holden, and her daughter. Mrs. Holden has given valuable service to the Georgia division as chairman of the Alexander Stephens Memorial Institute at Crawfordville, and is held in the highest esteem by the members of both organizations. Space forbids the mention of the noted women and men of the state who made the pilgrimage to Washington, of the wreathes placed on other places of note, on other treasured last resting places but the fact remains that Georgia joined hands this past week to make for the imperishable glory of Alexander Stephens, and the steadfastness of the cause for which he fought.

The Gold Star Banner report of the O. C. Horne chapter at Hawkinsville appears today on this page. It will be of educational value, showing the generous measurements the star chapter gave to the star chapter requirements. It is quite up to the standard of excellence. The entire Georgia division joins in regret at the serious illness of the president of the O. C. Horne chapter, Miss Lillie Martin, who served as assistant historian of the division last year. It is with great happiness that we learn of her improvement.

Mrs. W. Trox Bankston, division president, today sends a message to the members of her organization. Mrs. Bankston who is most brilliant and efficient, is planning many new ideas to feature the development of the work during her administration.

Mrs. R. E. Everett, corresponding secretary, has ordered a new supply of demits which will be furnished free to all in need of them. Application blanks will soon be secured and will be supplied as soon as possible.

:-: POPULAR BUDS OF THE SEASON AND BEAUTIFUL NEW YORK BRIDE :-:

Surrounded by hundreds of lovely floral bouquets, Miss Catherine Boyd, at the left of the page, is pictured in the becoming gown of flesh-colored tulle worn as she greeted Atlanta society when presented by her sister, Mrs. Cator Woolford, at an elaborate reception Tuesday at Jacqueland, the handsome Woolford home in Druid Hills. The striking figure in the center of the group is Mrs. Daniel Elliott Huger, of New York city, whose marriage was a recent fashionable event taking place at St. Patrick's cathedral in New York. Mrs. Huger was formerly Miss Betty Kress, beautiful daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Claude W. Kress, of New York. At the right of the page is Miss Mary Wellborn, lovely debutante daughter of M. B. Wellborn, whose debut ball, given by her father Thursday evening at the Piedmont Driving club, was one of the most brilliant social events of the season. Miss Wellborn wore for the occasion a Parisian model of Nile green chiffon, studded in crystals and silver beads, and finished with graceful bead fringe. The photos of Miss Boyd and Miss Wellborn are the work of the Little studio.

Among these will be the elaborate afternoon reception with which Mrs. Georgia Harris will entertain Wednesday, December 14, introducing her lovely young daughter, Miss Gertrude Harris, to Atlanta society; the lovely tea at which Miss Florence Eckford will be introduced to society by her mother, Mrs. F. Amid the round of social festivities that occupy Atlanta during the Christmas season are a number of delightful affairs which in a way are incident to the general whirl. Mrs. Sara Graham Mullhall, the distinguished woman meriting the $5,000 Pictorial Review award for 1925, will be the guest of Mrs. Chauncey Smith, at her home on Eighth street, arriving from New York today. Mrs. Mulhall received the award in view of her outstanding work among the unfortunate victims of opium, among whom she spent more than 20 years of her life. Her visit here will be of wide interest to those to whom service is an inspiration and an incentive to greater effort.

National Conservation And Thrift Chairman Issues Message

Mrs. Maurice Clark Turner, national chairman of the committee on conservation and thrift of the national society, D. A. R., contributes a most interesting article today, outlining the work of her committee. Her letter will be of much help to chapters in planning work along lines of conservation and thrift, work which is highly indorsed by the president general, Mrs. Alfred J. Brosseau. The communication follows:

"Dear Mmes. Regents, Chapter Chairmen and Members: This last spring I sent your chapter a letter requesting that your conservation and thrift work for next year be planned in time to appear in the 1927-28 chapter year book, at least one whole program devoted to this subject, or one sub-topic from this subject placed on each month's program. This will familiarize every Daughter with our general program, and I believe will double results this year. Our national program on these subjects has been outlined under these general heads: 'Tree Planting Honor Roll'—plant a tree for every member in your state. Is your state on this honor roll?

"'Forestry'—Study of nation's problems; preservation of forests; reforestation. 'A tree planted for every tree cut;' securing of local, state and national parks; fire prevention; memorial planting of groves and roads; state nurseries.

"'American Forest Week'—Set aside by presidential proclamation in April; every chapter to observe same.

"'Living Transplantable Christmas Trees'—Start vigorous campaigns now. Prevention of destruction of evergreens on farms and roadsides.

"'Birds, Game, Fish'—Protection, state and national preserves.

"'Wild Flowers'—Protection; uses of: use of 'Wild Flower Pledge;' planting wild flower gardens (from seed, not from transplantable roots); saving seed in bags; planting bare spots, railroad embankments, etc.

"'Watersheds and Waterfalls'—Preservation from destruction or marring.

"'Natural Scenic Wonders and Beauty'—Preserved from exploitation by private interests, for enjoyment of public.

"'Thrift'—Organize thrift school banks; use of budget system for chapters and state society; 'personal thrift' suggestions.

"'School'—City and rural; get them to cooperate in every way. Children are the future guardians of our country's welfare.

"'Legislation'—Study of conservation measures, passed and pending; ask for needed laws; use our vote.

"'Contests and Exhibits' on these subjects, giving prizes urged; exhibits at chapter meetings and state conferences especially important.

"We will continue to develop this program, with the addition of a few new points to be emphasized: Our new honor roll, 'a chairman for every chapter.' (Please help your state to report 100 per cent.) Present conservation work from the angle—The ultimate goal of conservation is the saving of human life, in time of peace and in time of war.

"This committee's field of accomplishment includes every line of endeavor that tends to conserve human life; that improves such living conditions as contribute to a continued development of the high type of individuals which is our country's ideal; and that assures our nation a physical independence of other nations.

"We center our efforts especially on trees and wild flowers and wild life and mineral resources and water and money because of their fundamental relationship to human existence and because, to get definite results, it seems practical to indicate a few definite objectives. Actual methods of obtaining preferred objectives must be decided by each chapter for itself, however.

"Mrs. Brosseau, our president general, stresses preparedness and support of our nation's defense policy—'the kind (of national defense) that defends only, and does not propose war.'

"Conservation is preparedness—at all times. Proper conservation of soil and water and mineral resources means the food and shelter we must have every day, the year round; it means also the materials—food, shelter, ammunition, transportation—our soldiers must have for adequate defense.

"Thrift means the saving of the health, time and money of our people necessary to safeguard the sources and insure the production of these materials.

"Together, conservation and thrift represent the very foundation of preparedness and defense. It is said our first line of defense, in case of actual war, is our manpower. Assuredly our resources are our second line, then, for manpower must have food, clothing, weapons, ammunition. But it seems to me that you and I and all the rest of our self-governing citizens, are really the first line of defense, for upon us rests the direct responsibility of seeing that our country is ever ready and able, day and night, 'to take its place in the big parade, of life and keep step with the best prepared nation there.' (Mrs. Brosseau.)

"'Welfare work for ex-soldiers, etc., is 'human conservation' directly applied. Please give this your attention and personal interest and report all you do to your state chairman of conservation.

"'Flood relief—Support and urge your state and national legislators to support such measures for the relief of flood victims as are practical and immediately applicable, and also to support such national policy as may be decided upon in the future for permanent flood control. Do what you can personally for flood victims, and report same.

"'Public safety—Support movements that will insure better public health, lessen accidents, or that in any other way will tend to decrease the number of deaths resulting from inadequate or unenforced laws, public indifference or ignorance, or any avoidable causes.

"'Indian welfare work—Revive the active interest in conserving our 'first Americans,' their history and traditions, that was developed five or more years ago under Mrs. Moss' leadership. All chapters are urged to study and support state and national measures for their assistance:

"'Conservation and associations, or state departments—Ascertain if your state has such a department or association, and if the D. A. R. have representation thereon. If not, agitate the subject of organizing one. Mrs. Carl Weeks, national vice chairman, 1324 Twenty-ninth street, Des Moines, Iowa, can furnish you with copies of the new Iowa Conservation association's plan of organization.

"'Expense fund—Vote your conservation committee an allowance for printing, prizes, and such other items as they may deem necessary to get real results in interesting and educating the public.

"'Present our 'Wild Flower Pledge' from the additional angle: The prairies without the wild flowers and grasses would not be prairies—they would be deserts. These, like trees, help to hold the soil in place and preserve moisture. These are the friends of the cattleman and sheepman; they feed great numbers of cattle and sheep (an important source of our meat, leather, wool supplies) and much wild life. All this, in addition to the 'spiritual food' their beauty offers to our eyes and minds.

"'Farmers in the fields mean food, cotton, other necessities. Plan ways to help the 'back to the farm movement;' support helpful legislation, rural schools, the extension work of our agricultural colleges and county demonstration agents; give these college prizes and scholarships for farm children; promote closer contact between city and country folk. The farmers own one-third of our forest land—ask their help in reforestation and protection of trees and plants from the ravages of tourists.

"'Contests, exhibits and prizes will be featured this year. Nothing interests children more, or secures better publicity. Please send me an account of these—subjects, prizes, pictures, cost. I wish to keep a complete list of what states and chapters feature there, and the money spent for same. I am enclosing herewith a list of subjects suggested for contests and exhibits—many already used successfully.

"'Publicity—Your conservation committee's work needs more publicity. The only way to secure general interest in a subject is to keep it before the public definitely, interestingly and often. Other women's organizations are publishing their work for conservation in headlines not to be ignored, the country over. Shall we not tell what we do, too? Shall we not do our share to awaken public interest? Many of our own members are active in this work for other societies, but do none for the D. A. R., and do not think to arrange that the Daughters shall get some credit for their work.

"'Use radio programs to interest the public in your plans. Send reports of all your conservation and thrift work to your local papers and to your state and national chairmen of publicity.

"'Also please send these reports to your state and national chairmen of conservation and thrift—every activity—that we may have a report for national conference of which your society can be proud.

"'Cordially yours,

"'MRS. MAURICE C. TURNER,
"'National Chairman.

"'Dallas, Texas.'"

Memorial Meeting For Mrs. Whitehead.

Thursday afternoon at the Federated clubhouse, the Thronateeska chapter D. A. R. of Albany, observed a memorial service in memory of its late lamented member, Mrs. Cena Jackson Whitehead. Those invited to join in the tribute were the Commodore Richard Dale chapter, D. A. R., the local chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy and the Colonial Dames. The clubroom was beautiful with giant white chrysanthemums and floral offerings. The regent, Mrs. R. L. Jones, presided and stated that "this service was to do honor to the memory of a past regent of the chapter, expresident of the U. D. C., a Colonial Dame and our own beloved friend, Mrs. Cena Jackson Whitehead." The first speaker was Dr. H. S. Cobey. Mrs. Whitehead took an active part in the history and making of Albany. She was one of the most devout worshippers of St. Paul's parish.

Following Dr. Cobey's address, Mrs. O. D. Culpepper sang, accompanied by Mrs. L. C. Fields, "Guide, Oh, Thou Great Jehovah," a favorite hymn of "Miss Cena's."

Honorable J. S. Davis was presented and paid a great tribute to Mrs. Whitehead. Mr. Davis said "Mrs. Whitehead's life was a compelling influence, her personality radiated power, her life was so full of usefulness, helpfulness and charity."

Mrs. L. A. Butterfield, of Savannah, outlined an address on "Georgia," delivered by T. Mayhew Canningham, a relative of Mrs. Whitehead, in New York city. She stated that Mrs. Whitehead had asked before her death to read the address at the next D. A. R. meeting. Mrs. Culpepper sang, "Goin' Home," as a closing number.

A telegram of sympathy to the chapter from Mrs. Anthony Wayne Cook, honorary president general, N. S., D. A. R., was read by Mrs. J. W. Walters.

Resolutions on the death of Mrs. Whitehead, written by Mrs. W. L. Davis, were read and adopted by the chapter.

State Chaplain Issues Message.

The D. A. R. state chaplain, Mrs. G. Walker Jordan, of Hawkinsville, Ga., calls attention briefly today to the articles on national defense appearing recently in the national D. A. R. magazine. Mrs. Jordon's message follows:

"Dear Madam Regent: Articles on national defense in our D. A. R. magazine bring to us forcefully the great need for greater effort to implant in the hearts of our children a firm belief in God. Although an organization exists in our country today the object of which is to abolish belief in God and that boasts of having representatives in every state in the union, we need not be afraid, but should take warning. There are also D. A. R. in every state, and if we are worthy of our blood inheritance, our society will be a worthy foe of this evil that threatens the life of our nation. Please report to me, not later than March 1, if your chapter indorses organizations that teach America's children that 'blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord.'"

Better Films Chairman Issues Movie Guide.

Mrs. Newton D. Chapman, national chairman of better films committee, recommends the following pictures as especially interesting this month, and shows which are for adult entertainment and which for the family as a whole. "The Student Prince," a beautiful love story of old Heidelburg, entirely suitable for everyone; Ramon Novarro and Norma Shearer are co-starred. "The Patent Leather Kid," with Richard Barthlemess—a war story telling of a cowardly prize fighter regenerated by war; exciting for children but splendid entertainment. "Stranded," the story of a girl breaking into the movies, showing that beauty is not the only requisite for fame in pictures and that girls should hesitate before attempting to become movie players; children will care less for it than young people and adults. "My Dog," a splendid story, showing how the love of a dog for his master and that master's love for the dog bring about a man's regeneration; children will like it. "The Drop Kick," a good college story with Richard Barthelmess; for children and adults. "Les Miserables," readers of Victor Hugo will like this version of the book; it is adult entertainment.

The Church and Drama association, a group composed of all denominations which has for its purpose elevating the drama by supporting the best, has started a weekly bulletin service which is a guide to current stage plays and motion pictures. George Reid Andrews is executive director of the association, with headquarters at 105 East Twenty-second street, New York.

The following pictures are also recommended as particularly suitable for entertainment at the Christmas season: "The Newlyweds Christmas Party," Universal, two reels. "A Kiss for Cinderella," Paramount, ten reels. "The Goose Hangs High," Paramount, six reels. "The Origin of Christmas," Fitzpatrick, one-half reel. "Birth of Our Savior," Edited Pictures, one reel. "A Christmas Carol," Edited Pictures, one reel. "The Fairy and the Wolf," Edited Pictures, five reels. "The Kiddies' Christmas," Edited Pictures, one reel. "The Night Before Christmas," Edited Pictures, two reels. "Scrooge," Edited Pictures, one reel. "Bachelor's Babies," Educational, two reels.

Hawkinsville D. A. R. Holds Meeting.

On Thursday the Hawkinsville chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution held its monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. R. S. Anderson. The program being centered around Armistice day and Thanksgiving day, was unusually impressive. A thanksgiving prayer offered by the chaplain, Mrs. W. C. McAllister, was followed by an interesting discussion of "The Homeless Poet—John Howard Payne," by Mrs. D. E. Duggan. A musical Armistice reading with "Home, Sweet Home" accompaniment was given by Mrs. E. E. Moore assisted by Mrs. J. L. Mims. An interesting feature of the program was quotations of the various United States presidents on "Thanksgiving." As an impressive close to the hour, Miss Henrietta Boyer sang the heart-stirring old ballad, "Keep the Home Fires Burning," followed by "Taps."

Federation founded by the late Mrs. Albert Braswell. "Laborers together with God." 1 Cor. 3:9.

"Not Good If Detached."

Mrs. Jessie H. Kerksis, Christian editor, submits the following editorial to the Federated Church page.

The church calendar of one of the largest and most influential churches in Atlanta reads as follows: "Not Good If Detached." So reads the coupon on our railroad ticket. Its value is determined by its relationship to the whole ticket. "Not good if detached" is usually true of church members, too. Cut off your relationships and fellowship with other members of the church body and you will soon become useless. There are 15,000 detached and useless Baptists in Atlanta. If you are one of them, get "joined up" at once and get busy for Christ."

Everyone who reads the above, no matter to what communion they belong, will mentally substitute the name of their own denomination for "Baptists." The useless and detached members of churches are everywhere, and the pity of it is, they do not realize when they come under this category themselves.

Many people migrating to a new place, who have been good workers in their local church, resolve they will "rest from their labors" for a while, and either fail to attend one of their own churches, or else go to one in the neighborhood, where they have no ties or obligations whatever. When a church is not your own, and you have no part or lot in its maintenance or support, one thing is certain, your interest in the aforesaid churches is of a feeble and "puny" variety and you really can no longer be considered a church member. It might be a good thing if every business man could practice running his business for awhile on voluntary contributions of those supposed to be interested in same, and see how soon it would go to the wall. Yet one hears the complaint frequently that they never go to church that they are not talking "money, money, money" all the time! Of course, they are talking it, they have to do so. A preacher and his family have to live the same as any other family, it takes money to light and heat a church and to pay the janitor, and money to run it, as it does a private home, only the church is on a larger scale and the expenses usually proportionate.

Financial Burdens.

In every church it is a few people in proportion to the size of the membership who assume the financial burdens, and it is not the rich members who give the most generously either. In fact some of those who drive up in limousines with liveried chauffeurs give a sum pitiable in size. Once when funds were being assembled to build a new church, in order to see how much each one already gave, a list was compiled of a large church in the city which had 1,100 members, and it was found that only 70 of that number gave a dollar each. And yet the Lord gives us everything we possess and the health and ability to make whatever money we have. "What hast thou done for Me?" would be a hard question indeed for some folks to answer.

Then many people live in a city for years before they affiliate themselves with any church, and a church letter in the bottom of a trunk, is just as dead as its owner is spiritually. You must "belong" to feel a deep and abiding interest. Often strangers have deaths in the family, or serious illness, and they haven't any pastor of their own and have to "borrow" one, who frequently is a complete stranger to them, and it isn't quite the same when those we love leave us, to have someone whom they never even knew, to conduct the last sad rites for them. But a minister, who has really and truly "ministered" and has married and buried and baptized the various members of the family as the years passed by, is nearer and dearer than even the physician who has served them ever since they can remember.

"Seat warmers" are no good to "king or country" and do not come often enough to have even a passing interest. How many church members do you know who don't come to church for months at a time? And oh, the excuses they offer inwardly cognizant of the fact that it isn't "respectable" not to attend church and take part in its work. But these same people take in all the movies, bridge parties and luncheons to which they are invited, and always have money to spend for anything they want. But when it comes to the Lord's house, and providing the means to perpetuate His Kingdom here on earth, they are weighed in the balance and found most decidedly wanting.

"Not Good if Detached." This is a shoe that pinches many of us in a very tender spot. But some wise-acre has said: 'Tis better late than never' and this is a condition we can rectify at once. Let us join up and become real members of the church of our choice, so that we will not be herded with the "goats" when the day of judgment comes, in which we all shall as surely participate as we will all have to one day leave this world, and give a reckoning of our stewardship during our sojourn here.

Briefly Told

During the past week, when a large number of Baptist Woman's Missionary societies throughout the city and state were observing the week of prayer for foreign missions, all hearts were saddened by announcement of the sudden death in North China of Charles Hartwell, one of the most valued missionaries of southern Baptists.

Miss Mary Crawford, returned missionary and teacher in one of the schools of North China, was the principal speaker at the week of prayer service held Monday afternoon, December 5, by the W. M. S. of the Ponce de Leon Baptist church.

Dr. N. A. Bryan, medical missionary to China, and his family, who have been recently located in Atlanta, have been notified that they will be among the first 40 missionaries to be returned to their respective fields when the funds from the Christmas offering for foreign missions shall have been received by the foreign mission board.

At the second district rally held Tuesday in Ponders Avenue Baptist church, Mrs. J. Furniss Lee, secretary of this district and a member of Second Baptist church, was in charge. The Second church was represented by the following members: Mesdames Hal F. Hentz, president; W. P. Coleman, John R. Dickey, T. H. Jeffries, J. T. Killebrew, J. F. Lee, C. A. Wallace and Miss Lucy M. Zachry.

The Business Women's league of Second Baptist church met Sunday afternoon, Mrs. F. J. Paxon, the president, presiding. A musical program and a most enjoyable address by W. J. Scott, instructor of Tech High, on "Motivating Life," furnished a delightful hour for the members and guests present. Circle C, Mrs. W. S. Haralson, chairman, and Mrs. Annie Harwell, co-chairman, was in charge. The next meeting of the league will be held in the church Sunday afternoon, January 8.

Mrs. Marvin Franklin, who has been very ill, is being cordially welcomed back among her friends again.

The "Messiah," which was presented at Park Street church last Sunday by the Agnes Scott Choral society, was a most brilliant musical treat. Mrs. Edward Akin presided at the organ and Mr. Lewis Johnson was the director. The appreciation of the event was expressed by a packed house.

Rose Mary Bridge Club Is Entertained.

Mrs. Frank Jones entertained the Rose Mary Bridge club Saturday evening at her home, 654 North Boulevard, N. E.

Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Dodson, Hiram Dodson, Mrs. Mary Gifford, Mrs. Mattie Mabry, Mrs. Annie Allen, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Falkner, Mrs. Traylor, Mrs. J. S. Kirk, Mrs. W. Chafin, Mrs. Ruth Pass, Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Godfrey and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Jones.

The next meeting will be with Mrs. J. B. Kirk.

Mrs. H. M. Horne Represents Christian Church at Recent Meet

Mrs. H. M. Horne, field worker of the United Christian Missionary society of the Disciples of Christ, who was the woman representative to the one-day convention at the First Christian church Thursday, December 1. For three years she was state president of the woman's mission board of southern California. She also has been a representative on the board of managers of the U. C. M. S. and a worker in the Mexican institute at San Antonio, Mexico. She served a term as president of the Federated Missionary society of Hollywood district.

The Christian churches of north Georgia held a "one-day convention" at the First Christian church Thursday, December 1. This is one of over 200 such conventions conducted by the United Christian Missionary society. This organization carries on the work of foreign missions, home missions, church erection, supports homes for the aged and homes for children. It combines the woman's missionary organization with that of the church at large. It is a real venture in the field of unifying the missionary work of a great religious body.

The team of workers which came to Atlanta consisted of Dr. Royal Dye, for many years a successful medical missionary in central Africa; Mrs. H. M. Horn, for a number of years a leader of the woman's work in southern California and now a field worker in the woman's department of the United Christian Missionary society, and N. K. McGowan, of Lexington, Ky., field representative for the southeast.

The program of all sessions set forth the needs of the fields of the world. The special feature of greatest interest to the women was the setting forth of the "Pentecostal Aims" of the women's societies, to be accomplished by May, 1930, when the nineteen hundredth anniversary of Pentecost will be celebrated in Washington, D. C.

In the evening two banquets—one for men and the other for women—were served by the ladies of the First Christian church. The women's program consisted of community singing and short talks, as follows: "The Year of Preparation," Mrs. David Wells, of the West End Christian church, of Atlanta; "Have We the Loyalty?" by Mrs. John Wood, of Winder; "Have We the Leadership?" by Mrs. R. J. Turner, of Athens; "Have We the Love?" by Mrs. Nathan T. Moore, of First church, of Atlanta. Mrs. Horn spoke of the Pentecostal aims and Dr. Royal J. Dye brought a most inspiring message on the needs of the world field. His address was enriched by the relating of interesting and thrilling experiences of his nearly 20 years of service at Bolenga, a mission station on the Congo where the equator crosses.

Mrs. Wallace Rogers Calls Meeting.

Mrs. Wallace Rogers, president, calls a meeting of the Federated Church Women of Georgia Tuesday, December 13, at 3 o'clock at the Y. W. C. A. on Auburn avenue. Reports of committees on nominations and on revision of by-laws and constitution will be heard.

Mrs. MacDougald Heads Auxiliary Of All Saints

The following officers were elected for 1928 at the meeting Monday of All Saints' branch of the Woman's auxiliary to the National Episcopal council: Mrs. John F. MacDougald president; Mrs. Rupert S. Horton, vice president; Mrs. Albert Waldon, secretary; Mrs. Robert P. Hare, treasurer; Mrs. Dunbar Roy, custodian of the united thank offering.

Mrs. MacDougald is now engaged in arranging her committees and appointing the chairmen. These chairmen, together with the officers, constitute the executive board. The election of Mrs. MacDougald to the presidency met with warm acclaim, both for her own sake and in memory of her mother, Mrs. Nellie Peters Black, who is enshrined in the hearts of All Saints' parishioners.

Baptist Young People's Work Goes Forward in Georgia

Mrs. L. O. Freeman, B. W. M. U. publicity superintendent, submits the following article on the young people's work:

Reports coming into Baptist woman's missionary headquarters indicate that, with the launching of plans for the ruby anniversary celebration, a new impetus is being given young people's work in Georgia.

Of the 45 new societies organized during November young people's societies predominated by a large majority. Among these new auxiliaries is a Y. W. A. recently organized by Miss Julia Allen, state young people's leader, at Shorter college. This news is most gratifying as it has long been the desire of the union that the girls of Shorter should be identified with the Baptist woman's work of the state through a college auxiliary. An actvie and progressive young woman's auxiliary, and one of which the union is very proud, is maintained by the students at Bessie Tift.

On Friday evening an auxiliary will be organized among the nurses in training at the Georgia Baptist hospital. Hospital Y. W. A's are designated as Grace McBride auxiliaries in memory of Miss Grace McBride, who consecrated her beautiful young life to service for the sick on the mission fields of China. This will be the first Grace McBride auxiliary to be organized in Georgia.

In December of last year the Rose Hill Y. W. A. of Columbus began a savings account with a local bank. During the year this account has increased by monthly contributions and sacrificial gifts from members, and last week during the December prayer season the entire amount was given as a Lottie Moon offering for foreign missions. This provident plan is strongly commended to other organizations, woman's missionary societies as auxiliaries.

Mission Study.

The executive board of the state union indorses the plan of Mrs. Taul White for a second statewide mission study institute. The time and place for the holding of this institute will be decided upon and announced later.

Mrs. White's "helps" on the "Life of Lottie Moon," written by Mrs. Una Roberts Lawrence, will soon be released from the press and ready for use in connection with the study of this book. It is particularly fitting that the life of Miss Moon should be studied at this season, for it will be remembered that the Christmas love offerings for foreign missions are called Lottie Moon gifts as a memorial to Miss Moon, who literally gave her life for Christ and China.

Mrs. A. F. McMahon, Miss Julia Allen and Mrs. Taul White, state officers, attended the mission study conference of the southwestern division, held November 20-30 at Camilla. Mrs. Charles Cater, of Quitman, is vice president of this division, and Mrs. J. M. Spence, of Camilla, is mission study chairman. Mrs. W. C. Twitty, of Pelham, is the newly-elected divisional chairman of literacy.

Training School.

Mrs. J. C. Lanier, training school trustee, is making an urgent request that contributions of pecans and canned peaches be sent to the school by societies and individuals. This fall these gifts, that have become the annual custom among Baptist women of the state, have been distressingly small. Mrs. Lanier further asks that Georgia Training school girls at Louisville be remembered at Christmas time with cards of love and greetings. Names and addresses may be secured from W. M. U. headquarters, Palmer building, Atlanta.

Owing to financial shortage and also prevailing conditions in China, a number of missionaries now at home on furlough will not be returned to their fields at the anticipated time. This is causing great disappointment among the missionaries. The First Baptist church, Atlanta, has assumed the financial responsibility of returning Miss Doris Knight to her work in China. Miss Knight plans to sail January 7.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard have safely arrived in Harbin, Manchuria, after a happy furlough to the states. Dr. and Mrs. James are leaving Harbin in December and returning home on account of Mrs. James' health, which is critical. Dr. and Mrs. James and Dr. and Mrs. Leonard are engaged in medical work in Manchuria, and thank the women of Georgia for the hospital sent them through the department of white cross.

Letters of interest have been received from Miss Alice Parker and Miss Kathrine Bryan, who are yet at their mission posts in China despite the serious revolutionary conditions by which they are surrounded. Letters and kodak pictures, relative to her work in the Philippines, have come to the office from Mrs. Munger, who is lovingly remembered by Georgia women as Miss Laura Lee Patrick, B. W. M. U. corresponding secretary-treasurer. Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Jackson, of Brazil, are now on furlough with relatives in Knoxville, Tenn. Considerable persecution of Baptists is being experienced both in Italy and Roumania, according to reports from missionary workers in these countries. The foreign mission board of the S. B. C. is now giving special attention to this deplorable situation.

Board Session.

At Tuesday's session of the state executive board Mrs. McMahon asked that all personal service reports of associational chairmen be sent direct to her at once in order that the state report may be prepared before the beginning of the new year. These reports will be sent to the Atlanta office because of the absence from the state of Mrs. W. W. Clayton, of Augusta, state personal service chairman, who is in Maryland recuperating from a long and serious illness.

The financial report of Mrs. McMahon, treasurer, for November, included $30,694.31, W. M. U. contributions to the cooperative program of southern Baptists. Gifts from the Georgia women toward this program, for the year, total $191,175.67. This represents a decrease from last year of approximately seven thousand dollars. It is hoped that before the end of the year this deficit may be made up.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Burton Davis gave a party Saturday celebrating the third anniversary of their young son, Jack. The home on Piedmont avenue was prettily decorated for the occasion. Many games were enjoyed. Twelve little friends participated.

BRICKS Without STRAW

BLUE RIBBON FICTION

by DORNFORD YATES

"Then go to the devil," roared Sir John.

In Which Fate Steps to The Center of the Stage And Makes a Better Match Than the Most Devoted (and Calculating) of Parents

NADEGE LAMBERT, spinster, tilted her chin.

"Don't be absurd," she said shortly. "I agreed to marry you, not to ignore the existence of every one else."

The man pulled his mustachios.

"I never see you, Nadege. You know I don't expect you to give up your friends, but—well, we mightn't be engaged, might we?"

The girl shrugged her white shoulders.

"I don't know what you expect. I never pick up a paper without seeing some reference—usually nauseating—to our approaching union: I flaunt your quite excellent ring: you have the right to kiss me whenever you please."

"I want some of your time, Nadege."

Miss Lambert rose to her feet and stretched luxuriously. His eyes on the lithe figure, Dominick Medmenham, bachelor, sat very still.

"I'm afraid you're out of date," said the lady. She raised her beautiful eyebrows, to point the sneer. "A woman's time is her own. It wasn't once: she had to give it up right and left: the process was called 'devotion.'"

"You mean——?"

"This. You're all right. If you weren't we shouldn't be engaged. As a husband you'll be quite admirable. Clean, not to good-looking, civil. We shall muck in together very well. But you must be content with that."

"With what?" said Dominick, quietly.

From over her shoulder, powder puff in hand, Miss Lambert looked him in the eyes.

"Are you out for trouble?" she said.

Medmenham smiled back.

"You know that I'm not, my lady. But we must have this out. Of course your time is your own, and always shall be. But—well, I don't want to sound soppy, but I rather like being with you. Don't you like being with me?"

"If I couldn't bear it we shouldn't be wrangling now. But I do wish you'd get it straight. A girl believes in amusement: it's the article of her faith: but she doesn't marry for amusement, unless she's a fool. She takes the best man she can get that won't let her down."

"Thank you," said Dominick, gently.

He rose, stepped to the fireplace and took the girl in his arms.

"I love you, Nadege," he said, simply. "I'll never quote it against you, but—don't you love me?"

Miss Lambert averted her face.

"I imagine I do. I don't know. Need you be so Victorian?"

"I must be natural," said Dominick, "now and again. And so must my wife." The girl slipped out of his arms: he let her go. "I don't know whether you love me, and I want to know very much."

"At the present moment," flashed Miss Lambert, "the answer is definitely 'No.' But that's your own fault. Every one dislikes being badgered."

Dominick stared upon the ground.

"I want you to be happy," he said, "but I want to be happy, too. And I shan't be happy, Nadege, if I haven't your love."

The girl hesitated. She perceived very clearly that she had gone too far. She had meant to lead Dominick a dance; and he had smiled and watched her, but had not danced. And now her pride was involved. She must confess that she loved him, haul down her pert little flag, or—the balloon would go up. Of that there was no doubt at all. Dominick was in earnest: everything was hanging upon her reply. If only he would look up . . . and see the light in her eyes. . . .

The sudden blare of a fox trot staggered into the room. The band had returned to its labors, and 'Pony' Bullock would be coming to claim his dance. And that would tear everything up. They couldn't be seen "philandering" If only he . . .

As she put out her arms toward him some one half entered the room, stifled an exclamation and withdrew precipitately.

Nadege could have screamed with rage.

Instead, she took her seat upon the arm of a chair, white to the lips.

"Have we done enough damage?" she said.

Dominick drew himself up.

"I want to know where I am."

"I'll tell you. You're on the edge. And if you want to stay there, I'd have a care. You can't 'come thro' the rye' in Charles street. It isn't done. And, in any event, I don't like it. Our marriage will be convenient: your name is quite a good one, and I can put up the wealth. Try to dig any deeper, my friend, and, I warn you, you'll ring the bell."

Dominick looked away.

"You may take it as rung," he said quietly.

Miss Lambert drew off her ring.

"Catch," she said.

Before he had time to turn, she flung the gem. This struck against his shoulder and fell at his feet.

"Sorry," said Nadege carelessly. "Where did it go?"

"I don't know," said the man.

Then he turned on his heel and walked out of the room.

Five minutes later 'Pony' Bullock in some dudgeon abandoned his search for Nadege. By so doing he saved his time. The lady was seated in her long, low, slate blue limousine, unconscious of the magic which the moon was making in the ways, shakily whispering "That's that" over and over again, with the tears running down her cheeks.

* * * *

The affair did not end there.

You may break an engagement ten days before the marriage, but those that made the match will scarcely throw up their hats. More. This particular union was to be the summit of the ladder which the bride's mother had so successfully climbed. Money being no object, such an attainment was to be suitably marked. The splendor, indeed, had already begun to blaze. . . . For this the bridegroom's father had no use at all. The match appealed to him because it was "sound." To maintain Black James as the estate required had long been beyond his means. Now he would retire to the dower house, and the fine old place he had supported would come by its own.

The decoration of the dower house was almost complete. The bath rooms he had installed were in excellent taste. Black James was too big. The dower house, on the other hand, was entirely convenient.

And so it is not surprising that the affair did not end in Charles street, or the long limousine.

Upon learning the unsavory news, Mrs. Lambert politely regretted that things had gone too far and that the passionate matter must take its course. When her daughter stared, she raised her elegant eyebrows and tossed her a note. This was an intimation that royalty was graciously disposed to honor with its presence the forthcoming rite. Mrs. Lambert could hardly have made a more foolish mistake. Nadege read the note through and laid it down. Her comment would have been unpardonable had she meant what she said.

At first Mrs. Lambert was unable to speak, then she threw back to her father, who had been born in Wapping and remained a master of insult to the day of his death. This was a second error, worse than her first. Nadedge heard her out. Then she left Eaton square, never to return.

Sir John Medmenham's temper had long been as short as his purse, and Dominick broke the tidings at an unfortunate time. His father had just approved the final draught of a marriage settlement which was worth reading.

When he had spoken, the baronet rose to his feet.

"Is this irrevocable?" he demanded.

"I'm afraid so, sir,"

"Then go to the devil!" roared Sir John. He slammed the table before him with the flat of his hand. "Go to the devil and tell him you're short of a home. D'you owe any money?"

"Not very much, sir."

"Send the bills to Forsyth before the end of the week."

"Thank you, sir."

"Don't dare to thank me. I'm doing it for my name."

Dominick took his leave. There was nothing to be said or done. In time his father might relent; of this, however, he was doubtful. So was Forsyth, solicitor, recalled from the country station by an uneasy groom. Do what the lawyer would, charm he never so wisely, Dominick Medmenham was disinherited that day.

It was nearly a year later that Nadege pawned her umbrella for half a crown: this in a quarter of London in which, ten months before, she would have feared to set foot.

The afternoon was sultry, and, as she walked along the Whitechapel road, she felt for the first time the definite stab of Fear.

She had not enjoyed the life of a chorus girl. Had she been able to obtain work in London it would not have been so bad; but the provinces were awful. The squalor of the lodgings, the sordid purlieus which harbored the stage doors, the sulky dreariness of the Sunday journeys' ends would have been intolerable, but for the downright bravery of her companions in woe. . . . And now the tour was ending, and she had nothing in view. . . . nothing . . .

She entered a confectioner's shop and expended a shilling on a meal. Then she walked to the theater. This was abominably hot—stifling. Her dressing room was commanding a fried fish shop, whose vile burnt offerings laded the stagnant air.

As she opened the door—"Come right in, darling," said Mabel Legrand. "Did you see the Prince of Wales? He's waiting for me down below with a bunch of aspidistras he grew himself. That's what smells so nice."

A shriek of laughter greeted the inelegant jest.

Nadege laughed with the rest and observed the familiar rite of undressing and making up.

As she powdered her face, a rap fell upon the door.

"Overture and beginners, please, ladies."

There was no air in the East End that night; the house was packed and reeking; after her four changes Nadege was ready to drop.

With Depression fast upon her shoulders, she dressed more slowly than the rest. As she was leaving the dismal, empty room, the storm, long overdue, broke with a crash. When she reached the stage door, the rain was falling in sheets.

Nadege hesitated, shrinking. With no umbrella, no coat, to enter the streets seemed madness. Her rooms were two miles away, and the busses which stopped at the corner were sure to be full. A taxi stood in the shadows, but she had not the fare; besides, it was engaged, waiting for somebody else. Perhaps, if she waited a little, the downpour would cease. The trouble was that the busses would soon stop running. Nadege did not want to walk home. For one thing she was dead beat; for another . . .

She peered out into the night; as if in reply a squall swept up the alley with a bellow of wrast.

The taxi driver stood in the doorway, hat in hand.

"May I give you a lift?" he said quietly.

It was Dominick Medmenham.

* * * *

By the time they had reached her lodgings the rain had ceased.

"I can't ask you in," said Nadege. "Perhaps you wouldn't come if I could."

"We could sit in the taxi," said the man, "for the length of a cigarette."

Nadege reentered the cab.

"Was this chance, Dominick? Or did you seek me out?"

"It was chance, Nadege. I didn't know where to look. You've changed your name."

"I know. Why are you doing this?"

"One has to live," said the man. "And you?"

"Same here. Mother went over the line. I couldn't stay on."

"My poor lady," said Dominick.

The girl drew a sharp breath.

"I do very well," she said. "It's a lazy life, and every one's awfully kind. Why did Sir John turn you down?"

"We had a dispute," said Medmenham. "He's getting old, you know. And, what with the gout and the times, the ice was always thin. And then, one day, I went through. I'm honestly happier—with something to do."

"So'm I," said Nadege stoutly.

There was a moment of silence.

Then: "I'm an owner driver," said Dominick, "and I live in Mayfair. I've a tiny flat over the garage, as tight as you please. Sometimes one of the old crowd picks me up. They're awfully nice. Stand on the pavement and talk, and, if I've driven them home, they try to make me come in. I drove Milly Bemuse and her brother a week ago. When they got out she gave me a five-pound note. When I protested, 'Don't spoil my evening,' she said.

"And old Lord Hillesley was immense. When I set him down at Arthur's he gave me my proper fare; then he asked me to park the cab and come in to lunch. But I've never seen you, Nadege. Perhaps you've been out of town."

The girl nodded.

'Did you ever drive mother?" she said.

"Once. But she didn't recognize me."

Nadege laughed.

"I can well believe that," she said. And then, irrelevantly, "I'll never go back."

Dominick swallowed.

"Have you no money of your own, Nadege?"

"Not a penny. Father had nothing. But I manage all right, Dominick. Of course, I don't dine at the Ritz, but neither do you; and I don't —give fivers to taxis because I used to know them in other days."

"O, my dear," said Dominick.

There was another silence. Nadege dared not trust her voice.

At length: "I must go," she said, quietly.

At once he left the cab and handed her out.

With her fingers in his, "You've been very kind," she said, gravely. "Kinder than I deserved."

Medmanham bowed his head.

"I've been very fortunate," he said. Then he looked up. "I shall be at the theater tomorrow to drive you home. It may be wet; and you can't always get a taxi down in those parts."

"Very well," said the girl, unsteadily.

She turned away abruptly, stepping across the pavement and opened the door. Medmenham saw a mean hall, lighted by a naked gas jet. Nadege passed in blindly, thrust the door to behind her and burst into tears.

* * * *

The tour was over.

The curtain had fallen upon "Joss Sticks" for the last time, and the dressing room was full of half-hearted laughter and regret.

"Opening Blackpool," said Mabel, "on the nineteenth of June. Don't forget, any one. But 'care of the Bank of England' will always do."

Nadege took no part in the chatter, for she had nothing to say. Like poor Constance, she was "at liberty" —out of a job.

The first to be dressed, she left the room amid a flurry of affectionate good will.

As she came to the stairs, somebody cried her name, and there was Mabel Legrand drawing her greasy kimono about her ample limbs.

Nadege returned, wondering.

The other put her arms round her neck.

"You poor baby," she said, gently. "don't be a fool. Go home. I don't care what it costs—it's cheaper than going on. I've no heart left, and my skin's turned into a hide; but I'm forty-five next Tuesday, and I've done it for twenty years. I came from a Devonshire rectory. You wouldn't guess that, but I did. Used to keep house for my father, an' drive out to call. Me——" She shook a sob from her throat. "What d'you think I'd give to be pickin' sweet peas in that garden and ringin' for tea? So go home, darling. Go home—before it's too late. Chuck your pride in the gutter; it's putrid stuff. See where mine's brought me——to Blackpool . . . on the nineteenth of June."

She kissed her roughly, flicked a tear from each eye, laughed and turned back to her room.

"See you some day," she shrilled. "So long, Nadege. Be good."

Before Nadege could reply, the door was shut.

The girl passed down the stairs and into the street. Medmenham was there, as usual, to drive her back to her rooms.

The attention distressed Nadege. It was out of all order for Dominick to wait upon her; she could make no sort of return; what was far worse, she valued his coming as she had never valued anything before. Each of those nightly rides was charged to her most private account; she would pay for them one by one in something more pitiful than tears. How many years would pass before she could leave a stage door without glancing up and down for a taxi which she knew would never be there? Nine, perhaps; he would have driven her nine times.

With these things in her heart she had protested more than once; but every night the taxi had been waiting, its driver standing beside it, with his hand on the door.

So Dominick drove her from the theater for the last time.

Arrived at her lodgings, Nadege was out of the taxi before he could leave his seat.

"Good night, Dominick," she said and put out her hand. "Good night and good-by and God bless you for being so sweet."

"Why 'good-by'?" said Medmanham, holding her hand in his.

"The tour's over. I—I open at Blackpool next week."

"Are you traveling tomorrow?"

Nadege tried to think straight. If she'd said 'yes' he would come to drive her to the station.

"No-o," she said.

"Let me drive you into the country—not very far. Into the woods somewhere. I'll bring some lunch." The girl shook her head. The hold on her fingers tightened. "Don't say 'No,' Nadege. I know I'm asking a lot, but I've not had a soul to talk to for nearly a year."

Nadege stared at the badge strapped to his coat. One day in heaven, and how many nights in hell?

"I've cost you enough," she said slowly.

"O, Nadege. Between friends . . ."

Almost roughly the girl withdrew her hand.

"All right. I'll come. Thank you."

Medmenham lifted his cap.

"Will half past ten be too early?"

"No, Dominick. Good night."

When she had the door open, she turned and lifted her hand.

The man waved his cap cheerfully.

* * * *

Nadege sat under a hawthorn which perfumed the air. Her fine, dark hair was free of her little felt hat; her grave brown eyes were feasting on what they saw.

Her color was faint, and the droop of her beautiful mouth told its own tale. She had always been slight, but her little wrists were slimmer, and her ankles were very fine. Her slippers had been well cared for, but they were growing old. Her simple, dark blue dress was the one she had been wearing when she left Eaton square.

Medmenham read these messages with a full heart.

Their lunch was over, and the man was sitting beside her, a pipe between his strong teeth. For more than half an hour they had not spoken, but had sat still together, the one looking at the other, and the other gazing on the country and finding there a refreshment which she had never known.

At last the girl took a deep breath.

"D'you often do this, Dominick?"

"This is the first time, Nadege."

"The first time? How strange. If I were in your place I couldn't keep away."

"I've had no one to go with," said Medmanham. "When will you be back in town?"

"I don't know," said Nadege slowly.

"Won't this tour bring you to London?"

"I—I don't know yet. It may. I've not seen the list." She got to her feet. "Those woods attract me, Dominick. D'you think we could walk to them? I'd like to see what's lying on the other side."

"Of course. Wait a moment while I disable the car."

This was behind a haystack and out of the sun. Medmenham knew the value of a smart looking cab.

The ridge commanded a road and a railway line. The country was handsome, but the road was busy with cars, and a train flung through the

What Has Happened to Justice?

Bay State Lenient to Dr. Walsh in Spite of Judge's Protest — Freed of Murder Charge by Jury

MASSACHUSETTS justice, which had been so merciful with Dr. William M. Robb in the Wolschendorf suitcase mystery of 1923, repeated itself in almost every detail in the Edith Greene case last year.

On the morning of July 13, 1926, two workmen walking along Harvard street in the Mattapan section of Boston, noticed two large cardboard boxes in the brush by the wall of the New Calvary cemetery. The boxes, of the type used to hold floral designs were securely bound with heavy window cord. The men decided there must be something in them. They undid the knots.

The boxes contained the dismembered body of a young woman.

The body was unclothed except for a cotton chemise which covered the torso, and a pair of green silk stockings on the legs. The boxes were without marks. Near by the men found a burlap bag which contained other dismembered pieces. Apparently the boxes and bag had been thrown from a passing automobile.

She had been about 22 years old, the police decided; a pretty girl with dark bobbed hair. According to Medical Examiner Timothy J. Leary, the young woman had been dead about a week. He stated after his examination that she had evidently died while undergoing a criminal operation.

Further substantiation of this was in the fact that the dismemberment had been done with great skill. Dr. Leary was quite positive that only a surgeon could have done the job so well.

It remained then to identify the victim and find the surgeon.

Discovered Open Grave.

Detectives went over the ground exhaustively and soon came upon an open grave in the cemetery not far from where the body was found. They concluded that the guilty man or men had planned to bury the boxes and bag as soon as they had the opportunity.

The police admitted they had a puzzling case on their hands. It reminded them of the baffling Tyngsboro suitcase mystery of 1923 which readers of this series will recall. In that case the dismembered body of a woman all except the head—was found in two suitcases in the Merrimac river. It was not until many days later that the mystery was cleared up.

James Vincent Ford.

In this problem, however, the police at least had the head, and as soon as possible a photograph of the victim's profile was published in the newspapers.

Could anyone identify this woman? the police asked. All Boston studied the picture—and soon the sordid facts began to pile up.

The first person to identify the picture was Miss Bessie Landry, an employee of the Boston Psychopathic hospital, who informed the police that it looked very much like a photo of a young woman she knew named Edith Greene. Miss Landry visited the morgue and at once established beyond a doubt that the dead girl was her fellow worker.

Miss Greene had been a state ward since infancy, the police learned. She had been employed as a day attendant in the hospital from April 26 to June 23, when she left because of her condition. She hired a room in a house at 233 Warren street, Roxbury. The landlady there recalled a wistful girl whose eyes were often wet and who had gone out one day with a young man. She said the young man had come back several days later and tried to get the girl's clothes.

The late Edith Greene.

The police naturally, were interested in the young man.

They found out that he was James Vincent Ford, 21-year-old shipping clerk. He and Miss Greene had been "going together" for a long while, said persons who knew them. He lived at 61 Telegraph st., South Boston.

The detectives decided to look up young Ford and have a talk with him.

It was a newspaper reporter who finally encountered Ford late on the night of the 14th. The young man had been roaming the streets in torture, his nerves shattered by the ordeal he had been through. He said he had been "living in hell" and that he had died a thousand deaths.

"It'll relieve me to get it all off my chest," he admitted.

Together, Ford and the reporter went to the home of a lawyer, who summoned Superintendent of Police Michael Crowley. To this group in the lawyer's home the boy told the harrowing story of Edith Greene and her death.

Here is the story—

He had met Edith two years before in South Boston as she passed him on the street with some other girls. She was pretty, he said, with pretty brown eyes and dark hair; "was a good girl girl, too," he added.

Miss Greene was employed as a maid in South Boston at that time. Later she worked in Swampscott. All the time young Ford paid court to her. He was very fond of her, he said, and she seemed fond of him. It seemed to be agreed between them that some day they would marry. Then, in the spring of 1926, the girl went to her last position, in the hospital in Boston.

According to Ford, it was not until about a month before the end that Edith told him the frightening news that she was to become a mother.

Talked Over Future.

"We let it go for a while," he continued. "Then she told me she had fainted several times at the hospital, and that she was afraid the doctors there would learn of the trouble she was in. We decided to get married.

"I liked her well enough although there were times when I thought I didn't have enough money to get married. But I told her I would marry her, that she needn't worry about that. I really liked her a lot—she was a nice girl."

Ford said they went to a priest and on July 13 filed their marriage intentions. But — perhaps to Ford's eternal regret—there was no marriage. Ford said that Edith told him "something that frightened him," something that led him to change his mind.

"I told her I guessed we had better not get married," he said.

They talked over the future. He suggested that she go back to the "state people," into an institution where she had gone first as a child of five, and from which she had emerged years later to take up the existence of an ordinary, average girl. Ford said she cried and begged him not to force her to do that.

"If I go back," she sobbed, "they will give me fifteen years for this."

So they came to the dread decision to have an operation performed. Ford had heard of a doctor who would perform such an operation—a Dr. Thomas E. Walsh. He went to see Dr. Walsh.

"He struck me as being a nice sort of man. He put me at my ease right away. When I came in the door the doctor said, "Well, what's the trouble, son?" It made me feel as though he was my friend, as though I could put all my trust in him.

"I told him what I wanted and he agreed. He said he usually sent girls to Somerville or Watertown but that he would talk to his wife and see if she would let him keep Edith there. He went out of the room to see his wife and when he came back he said it was all right, that his wife said Edith could stay there and everything would be all right for $150."

Ford Faints.

He took Miss Greene to Dr. Walsh's home on Friday morning, July 10. He returned there Friday night and nothing had been done. Then on Saturday he again visited the doctor's home and Dr. Walsh assured him that everything would be all right and not to worry.

During this visit, Saturday evening, Ford said he saw Edith lying on a couch, fully dressed. There was a party going on. The doctor explained that it was an "anniversary." Ford went away much relieved by the doctor's words.

The next morning he called Dr. Walsh on the telephone. The doctor told him to come to the house right away. The man's tone of voice frightened the youth. Instinctively, he knew that something had happened.

"The first thing he said when I got there was: 'She's gone!' I said: 'Gone? What do you mean, she's gone?' 'She's dead,' the doctor said.

"Then I fainted."

It was the first time in his life he had ever fainted. When he recovered consciousness he jumped to his feet and exclaimed:

District Attorney Thomas C. O'Brien.

"We must get the police quick!"

"No you don't," returned Walsh, according to the youth. "Sit down and get your nerve. We can't let this get out, you know. It would ruin us all. We have got to dispose of the body!"

"My God! What do you mean, dispose of the body? I couldn't do that! Someone would be sure to find out!"

"No they wouldn't," the doctor insisted. She's a state ward, and nobody will think anything of her disappearing."

"But the woman at the rooming house—she'd miss her. And my friends would wonder about it. I know they'd think it funny—not seeing her. This is terrible!"

He buried his face in his hands.

"Listen, son, get your nerve," re-

Things New and Old About the Bible

By W. P. KING
Pastor First Methodist Church, Athens, Ga.

The Insight of an Ancient Saint.

THE book of Job contains 42 chapters, which it will profit us to read not in a desultory fashion, but continuously as you read an interesting novel. Carlyle pronounces it the sublimest book ever written. Its author is unknown, its date is unknown, but possibly no other Old Testament book has entered so deeply into human thought. The old orthodox position was that prosperity is always a proof of righteousness and God's favor, and adversity is always a sign of wickedness and God's wrath. If a man suffers it is because he has sinned, and if he is a great sufferer, he is a great sinner. According to the old theory Jehovah was the author of all natural evil. There were no secondary causes. All things both good and evil proceeded from the same divine source. It was held that the ministry of natural evil, such as accident or disease was directed specifically against moral evil. What men suffer was the divinely appointed penalty of moral evil, the wrong they had done. Around this idea the whole discussion of the book of Job moves.

I.

The purpose which the book of Job serves.

Its main aim is to refute the dominant theory that all suffering proceeds from sin.

The book teaches:

That suffering may be a trial of righteousness, and that as such it may strengthen faith, and is therefore disciplinary.

That piety is not perfected in the field of prosperity.

That real piety is unshaken by adversity, and unspoiled by prosperity.

That a correct idea of suffering widens man's view of the providence of God and vindicates His justice. It is the world problem of human suffering and divine justice.

That the old theory was very persistent, we see in the incidents of Christ's life, when questions were asked about those whose blood Pilate mingled with their sacrifices, and those on whom the tower of Siloam fell, and the man born blind; but in each case Jesus answered that it was not the retribution of God. Of course the example of Christ himself is a complete reply to the old error. He was the one person who could throw out the challenge, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" Yet He was born and reared in poverty. He lived a wandering life without a home. He was distrusted by His own family, forsaken by His friends, betrayed by a disciple, persecuted by His enemies with the utmost cruelty, and after a public life of three short years died in the company of thieves with the most excruciating agonies of crucifixion. The career of Jesus the one perfectly righteous man who has lived in our world does not agree with the statement of Elihu in the book of Job, "If they obey and serve Him they shall spend their days in prosperity and their years in pleasure."

This is why the cross was a stumbling block to the Jews, since if God allowed anyone to die such a disgraceful death it must be because he was a great sinner. This was why the Jews rejected Jesus as Messiah, since they were convinced that no man could suffer as Jesus did and still be in favor of God. This is the explanation of the grief of St. Paul over his thorn in the flesh, since a bodily affliction was not only an offense against the aesthetic sense of his hearers, but also a sure mark of moral obliquity.

Virtue is always rewarded and wickedness always punished, but God does not pay men off in the current coin of this world. God does not purchase the obedience of men with a bribe of gold. It is a very popular notion in the church and sometimes in the pulpit that a man will more than get back the money he gives to the church and the kingdom of God. If a man's liberality stands on that mercenary foundation, I don't object to destroying the foundation. The only worthy motive is to give because generosity is better than greed, and goodness is better than gold. If you give five dollars, a hundred dollars, or a thousand dollars to the church, you will in all probability live just that much poorer and die just that much poorer. Human life is such a curiously complex affair until it is necessary to modify the statement. It is true that an ungenerous man frequently disgusts, and thereby suffers even financial loss. It is true on the other hand that a righteous man possesses certain qualities such as freedom from expensive vices, which lead to temporal prosperity. But in the main the old idea breaks down. Jay Gould has not been canonized. Carnegie is not enrolled among the saints. The millionaire Girard established a university from which religion is barred. St. Paul suffered the loss of all things for the cause of his Lord and didn't get a dollar back, but died poor. A great many of our cheap story books are full of this kind of false morality. The hero always comes out with flying colors. The villian is always overtaken by dire calamity. The spelling books and readers that some of you used to study are full of this kind of sugar plum religion. Johnny was a good boy and he got a plum cake, and Tommy was a bad boy and he got the stick. Johnny Goodchild grew up to be the richest man in town and Tommy Scapegrace grew up to be the poorest man in town. But how often the reverse is true, and it is Tommy Scapegrace who comes into wealth and prominence, becomes mayor of his town and if he gets bad enough may break into the legislature. This false theory is fairly met in the book of Job. There are in contrast the unusual righteousness of Job's character and the unusual severity of his sufferings.

"PEOPLE DON'T DO SUCH THINGS" is one of those sophisticated goings-on in fashionable circles that is more smart-aleck than smart. The voguish clothes are there, ah yes, and the people in them certainly are the ones for making sparkling epigrammatic remarks. As the first two scenes occur at the breakfast table, you know full well you are at a theater, for in real life those smart persons who even make the breakfast table have such awful hang-overs, they never make clever remarks. Furthermore they want to kill anyone who does.

Personally I enjoyed "People Don't Do Such Things" but I understand the general opinion is that it's not so hot. And yet it is smutty enough for even the most demanding members of the gutter set. Really, when the wife and the mistress come to the decision to both live in the same house with him, I found these withered old cheeks struggling violently to go red. The sight, I am told, was not pleasant to behold.

John Bennett has been here and I saw him spinning about a night club with Anne Heywood, also here for a few days from Worcester. Then I ran into Billy Huger the other night just as he was dashing to make a train. That same night, I saw Joel Hurt and Orme Campbell. In fact in thinking it over, the only familiar Atlanta sights I missed that night was seeing Miss Nora Northern or at least Emily West driving past in her Essex. Where is that Essex now?

The outstanding play of the last few weeks is "Coquette" that excellent production in which Helen Hayes again demonstrates her right to be considered one of our two best young actresses. The other one is, in my opinion, Katherine Cornell, now in "The Letter." This year, Miss Hayes has the better play, as "Coquette" is a magnificent piece of work and incidentally about the only authentic play about southern life I've ever seen. During some of the conversation, I could close my eyes and believe I was right in the front parlor with you again.

Elliot Cabot—unhum, one of the Boston Cabots—is excellent in the leading male role. I would not hesitate to suggest your putting "Coquette" at the head of your list of plays-to-be-seen if that were all you had to do. But I have to add the rather distressing admonition, "if you can get in." They've stood at every performance since its opening.

Ever since they dressed "Hamlet" up in Brooks Brothers clothes, I knew we would eventually get all of Mr. Shakespeare's numbers dolled up in snappy 1927 models. It now happens that Mary Ellis and Basil Sydney have subjected "The Taming of the Shrew" to this face-lifting process and the result is very pleasant. Maybe it has been those hideous robes they used to wear which made Shakespearean productions seem so heavy and awesome.

I liked Miss Ellis' fiery Catherine less than anything I've ever seen her do and I wasn't carried away with Mr. Sydney's performance of the tamer. The last time I saw this play was in your city when that gifted young actress, Catherine Hook, essayed the fiendish shrew in the back yard of North Avenue Presbyterian school.

The present production at the Garrick is altogether to the good and I'd suggest you see Shakespeare in knickers and sequins and see if you don't think he bears up rather well in them.

A sound and absorbing melodrama is "The Racket," a recent arrival on Broadway. It is another of those plays which are determined to show up crooked politics and as might be supposed they've again chosen poor dear old Chicago for the scene of their exposure. The plot also draws in a lot of newspaper reporters and for once on the stage they conduct themselves like real newspaper men. At least so I'm told, for after all, out-of-town correspondents conduct themselves like nothing before seen on land or so. And so isn't it fine that while reviewing a play for you I could get a peep at how I'm supposed to act?

Marion Coakley, the sole woman in the cast was excellent, I thought, in her portrayal of a soiled lady of the street-walking set. Norman Foster, the young chap who was so good as the boy in "The Barker" last year, plays the cub reporter in a thoroughly engaging way.

See "The Racket" for a good thrill.

If you can conceive of a more enticing production outside a movie house than "Greta Garbo and John Gilbert in "Love," I don't know what it is. This screen version of "Anna Karenina" had its brilliant premiere at the Embassy the other night and those two inflammables, Garbo and Gilbert, again prove they conduct the best movie petting parties on our screen. Miss Garbo, who at times resembles Norma Talmadge, Lillian Gish and Gloria Swanson, is to my mind, an improvement on all of them. And getting local for a moment, I also see in her a curious resemblance to Mrs. Godfrey McDonald. Mr. Gilbert does nothing in this picture to lose his title of screenland's most easily ignited lover.

Movie openings of the big feature films continue to draw throngs of sidewalk spectators. As you alight from your taxi, you are likely to hear whispered debates as to whether you are Ramon Navarro or William Haines. You are entirely in error in supposing that cries of "Ben Turpin" greet my arrival at any premieres. Someone did leap forward at one opening and ask your staggered correspondent for his autograph. As I was about to ask "For what?" the misguided girl said "For years you, Harrison Ford, have been my fav-o-rite." Physicians maintain that Mr. Ford has a fair chance of recovering from his breakdown on being shown one of my jauntiest photographs.

PAGES FROM MY LIFE

— BY —
FEODOR CHALIAPINE

"The only authorized English translation of my autobiography."

Success.

MY STAGE successes were noted by the direction of the Imperial Theaters. The idea of again appearing in the Imperial Theaters, under the management of a new chief, Colonel Teliakovsky, who was willing to fall in with the wishes of the artists, was agreeable to me, for I knew what incomparably greater opportunities for wide artistic activity, what possibilities for the appropriate staging of opera, the Imperial Theaters could afford.

I signed a contract for three years which stipulated a salary of nine, ten and eleven thousand roubles for the first, second and third years, respectively, with a fine of 15,000 roubles in the event of failure to fulfill the full period of the engagement.

My first reappearance on the Imperial stage took place in "Faust." The public received me with much warmth. I was presented with a garland and a parchment shield bearing the inscription: "With your shield or upon it."

But very soon everything began to relapse into the old ways. The legend about my drunken habits grew. It was reported that in the privacy of my home I used to knock people about with the samovar or any other heavy article that came handy. On one occasion I sang Mephistipheles' Serenade while seated on the steps of Margarita's porch, instead of standing as usual. After that it was currently reported that Chaliapine sang the opera in the state of blind intoxication, so drunk, in fact, that he could not stand and had to sing lying down.

I had learned to speak Italian fairly well, and began to dream of appearing on the stage in Paris and London; although I had doubts whether I should ever realize my ambition in that direction.

In the year 1900 I went to visit the World's Fair at Paris with very pleasurable, though by no means definite, anticipations. I knew that my friend V. V. Andreieff would be there with his Balalaika orchestra, as well as many other Russians.

As formerly at Petrograd, Andreieff introduced me to various Parisian circles of music lovers. I sang at a number of afternoon teas, and achieved a very definite success.

This journey to Paris and my appearances at soirees led to an event which I had not anticipated, but which was of very great importance for me; in the spring of the following year I received a telegram from the theater "La Scala" in Milan proposing that I should sing Boito's "Mefistofele" there, and inquiring what would be my terms for an engagement.

I could not sing in Italian, did not know Boito's opera, and could not make up my mind to reply in the affirmative to Milan. I passed two days in a highly nervous frame of mind and unable to sleep or eat. When I had recovered my equilibrium to some extent, however, I looked through the score of Boito's opera, and found that the role of Mefistofele was suited to my voice. As this alone was not sufficient to restore my self-confidence, I telegraphed to Milan a request for 15,000 francs for ten performances, secretly hoping that the management of the theater would not agree to such a figure. But my terms were accepted!

Rachmaninoff was the first to whom I imparted the news. and my state of mind. He expressed a wish to go with me, saying:

"Excellent! I will study music there, and in my spare time will help you to study the opera."

We went to Varezze, a little spot near Genoa, on the road to San Remo, and settled down there to a very quiet existence, getting up and going to bed early, and giving up tobacco.

I had long had in my mind the idea of playing "Mefistofele" in a semi-nude state, as I considered that so abstract a figure called for its own special plastic representation. The devil in stage costume is not a genuine devil. I wanted to attain outlines which would do justice to the personality I had to express. The problem was, how to appear nude on the stage without shocking my audience.

I told my painter friends of my idea, and they approved of it. I resolved to play the prologue at all events nude to the waist.

Having got my costumes made, I set out for Milan.

The performance began. I trembled as I had done at my first debut in "Galka" at Ufa, and my legs seemed made of cotton wool. Through a mist I beheld the vast hall, densely packed with people.

I was drawn on a wheeled contrivance amongst clouds, and stood on this at an opening covered with gauze, whence I sang:

"Ave, Signor!"

I sang almost unconsciously, simply singing from memory all I knew, with all the power of voice I had at command. My heart thumped, my eyes grew dim and I felt dizzy.

I had just finished my last words, after which the chorus had to sing, when I heard a strange loud cracking noise. I thought that the wheeled conveyance on which I stood must have broken down, or some of the scenery fallen. I bent my head instinctively, but comprehended in the same instant that the dull booming sound proceeded from the auditorium.

What went on there was something I could never have imagined. Only those who have been in an Italian theater can conceive what Italian applause or protest is like. The audience seemed to have taken leave of its senses, and the prologue was interrupted in the very middle. I felt weak and overcome, almost unable to stand. My knees were knocking together; a wave of fear and delight invaded my bosom. The director of the theater appeared beside me, in evening dress.

"Come, come," he cried. "Thank them! Bow! Come on!"

The stout doorkeeper showed himself, also dancing about, and saying:

"Aha, now do you see? What did I tell you? I knew! Bravo!"

He clapped his hands and applauded just as though he were the audience, then retired whence he had come still dancing.

I stood before the footlights and bowed my acknowledgements. I could distinguish nothing in the vast auditorium but a sea of white faces, the bare shoulders of ladies in evening dress, and the sparkle of precious stones, while the thousands of pairs of clapping hands seemed like the fluttering wings of birds.

It was easier for me to sing after that; although after my efforts in the "prologue" I felt weaker and seemed to have spent much of my nervous force. The entire performance, however, was a great success.

Caruso; Monte Carlo.

On evenings when I was not singing I used to go to "La Scala" to listen to operas as a member of the audience. The administration kindly provided me with a seat in the stalls, and I was able to observe the Italian audiences from their midst instead of from the stage. I remember very vividly a production of the opera "L'Elisir d'Amore," in which Caruso sang wonderfully. He was then a young man, full of energy, a jolly companion and an excellent friend. He had the breadth of character on which we Russians pride ourselves, and was good-natured and sympathetic to a very uncommon degree. He always willingly and generously assisted fellow-artists who happened to be in difficulties.

Well, Caruso, who was already the favorite of the public in Milan, sang and aria in surpassing fashion. The audience called for an encore, and by some miracle he sang it again still better than before. In the wildest enthusiasm the audience again demanded unanimously:

"Encore, dear Caruso, encore!"

Next to me was sitting a man in eyeglasses and with a short grey beard. He appeared to be greatly moved, but did not applaud loudly, contenting himself with repeating in subdued tones:

"Bravo!"

To judge by externals, he was a small shopkeeper, perhaps the proprietor or senior clerk of a clothing store; a man who understood how to sell a necktie. When Caruso sang his aria the first time, this individual also cried "encore," but when the encore was given he confined himself to applauding, and when the audience began to demand the aria for the third time, he sprang to his feet and cried in a thin high voice:

"Why are you all shouting for him to sing a third time? Do you think he can go on singing time after time, like a cannon loading and firing? Enough!"

This attitude towards an artist surprised me very much. I could see that the man would have been pleased to listen even ten times to Caruso, but that he understood that it was difficult for an artist to sing the same aria three times in succession.

When the series of performances for which my services had been engaged was concluded, I went to a restaurant with some artist friend. People approached our table and congratulated me, expressing regret that the performances were over. It was all done in the simplest, most pleasant way in the world, without a trace of any desire to scrape acquaintance unnecessarily. When nearly everyone had gone home, I invited some young men who still remained to join our table, and ordered a couple of dozen bottles of champagne, in the desire to give expression to my feelings. The waiters, and the remaining diners as well, looked at me as though they feared I had lost my mind, but my invitation was accepted, which gave me pleasure.

Among those present was Gabriele d'Annunzio, then a powerful looking blonde young man with a short pointed beard. He proposed a toast, which I think must have been very clever and literary, for I understood not a word of it. Afterwards I became very well acquainted with him, and not so very long ago, in fact, just before the war, we were meditating together on the possibility of composing an opera which should harmoniously unite the drama with music, song and dialogue.

I returned to Russia via Paris in a very good humor with myself and the world, feeling that I had accomplished something which had not merely been of benefit to myself alone.

My success in Italy had excellent consequences for me; very soon afterwards I received an invitation to sing in the theater of Raoul Ginsburg at Monte Carlo.

A little fellow with an enormous nose and the shrewd eyes of a business man, met me on my arrival with a cheery, noisy welcome. This was Raoul Ginsburg. "How pleased I am to see you!" he cried in his broken Russian.

The series of performances in which I took part commenced with "Mefistofele." Ginsburg's theater and stage were small; there was hardly room to turn round in the dressing-rooms. The place, however, as a whole was agreeable and even elegant. But the best thing in it was Raoul Ginsburg himself. He was always in good humor, and quite unjustifiably delighted with everything.

"What a wonderful performance today!" he used to cry, although the performance had not yet even begun. The audience received the "prologue" very sympathetically. The reception given to it warmed me up, and I played the scene on the Brocken as I have rarely been able to do it.

I got an ovation, and later on my colleague and rival Renault came to me and said, pressing my hand with sincere emotion:

"Well done, my friend!"

Raoul Ginsburg danced about, beaming with pleasure, and overwhelmed me with noisy compliments.

When I got back again to Russia, where everything was enmeshed in a network of prohibitions, and where those in power were so fond of giving orders, I got into hot water almost immediately. Preparations were on foot for the staging of "Russlaka." The orchestra was under the direction of a former choirmaster, who presumably had been appointed to the post of conductor because he was always able to compromise with his artistic conscience and conduct works whether he knew them or not.

I knew the whole of "Russalka" by heart from beginning to end, and therefore did not pay much attention to the rehearsals. When the first public performance of the opera took place, I was horrified to find that the conductor had altered the rhythm in the first act, in an extraordinary manner. The effect was really so bad that I thought it must have been done out of sheer ill-will.

I was furious, and at the end of the first act asked the conductor what he was doing.

He replied, raising his voice, that he had no wish to enter into a discussion with me, and that if I wanted to make any protest I might address myself to the management. My indignation was such that I took off my costume, dressed and went home, resolved to have nothing more to do with the government theater. I had hardly entered my flat when an official arrived from the theater, and I was persuaded to return and finish the performance. The audience knew nothing of what had occurred but it

Do Men Prefer Cleve

An Interview With
RUDOLPH M. BINDER
Professor of Sociology, New York University

THERE is an idea current in these United States that men are afraid to marry smart women. Dumb Dora, reads the legend, has a better chance to hook a husband than the college girls who wear a Phi Beta Kappa scholarship key as a lavaliere.

The American man need no longer pass this libel with a weak defense. A scientific investigation has provided him with an unanswerable reply. In the only study ever made of the question as to whether stupid girls have the marrying edge on the bright ones it is demonstrated that a lame brain is no assurance that the girl can land a husband.

Dr. J. S. Bolin and Dr. S. J. Holmes, of the University of California, examined the records of 2,074 women who had graduated from the college between 1874 and 1910. They found in comparing scholarship records with the number of marriages that the brighter girls ranged a shade higher in matrimonial success than their less intelligent sisters.

Neither health, temperament, racial extraction nor beauty was considered by the investigators in compiling the figures for their result. Only one classification was made. Did the girl rate high in class standing, or an indication of hard study or special brilliance, or did she just manage to make the grade for graduation?

Of the number of alumnae whose fate in the matrimonial sweepstakes was recorded, 1,160 were found married and 914 unmarried; this making the percentage of married practically 56 per cent. As this percentage does not vary materially from those of other co-educational or women's colleges where similar figures have been compiled, it is considered likely that the results given in the detailed study of the California figures would be practically the same for all the institutions.

The class standing of the girls who married gave them a rating of 2.017, while the unmarried class record was 2.009, a mere difference of .008, which not only destroys the fiction of masculine fear of a brainy mate but shows a slight discrimination in favor of the bluestocking.

Another fact which smashes the old story is the discovery that there is no relation between the scholastic records and the time it takes a girl to get married after graduation. The tabulation shows that the average marriage occurred 4.6 years after graduation, with the largest number occurring the first year after graduation. These conclusions published in the Journal of Heredity also gave a similar figure for the marriages of girls who were members of the Phi Beta Kappa.

A further demonstration of how this study upsets a widely held opinion was found in the records of the Phi Beta Kappa from 1889 to 1910. The percentage of marriages among these women who had won scholastic honors was practically 55 per cent, just 1 per cent short of the average for all the coeds.

While the analysis made of the University of California coeds proves that brains are not a handicap to a college woman, why is it that so large a percentage do not marry at all? Is there anything in the college atmosphere or in the type of woman drawn to college that is responsible for the section of coeds that remain single?

Questionnaires sent to 10,000 graduates brought revealing data on whether the students were marrying, whether they were following the profession for which they had prepared themselves and whether they were engaged in work that was beneficial to the community as a whole or in purely personal enterprises.

Startling facts were brought forth in connection with the first question, which concerned marriage. Few more than half of the women graduates accept the responsibilities of matrimony. Only one-fourth of the coeds ever became mothers.

Miss Lucy Stebbins, dean of women, had her own theory when the findings were announced. "It isn't so much that the college girl must have a superior being to admire," she said. "She hesitates to enter wedlock because of the undoubted advantage she can gain by pursuing a career. The sacrifice involved in making a home and raising a family is too great, and, further, the girl of the higher education is content to wait in independence for romance to find her, rather than to seek it out. She can afford to wait."

The large number of teachers listed among the women — more than one-third of the graduates—was one of the outstanding items. If the women are not concentrating their energies upon a home and children of their own, they are "mothering" children in the aggregate, teaching the offspring of others the ideals of citizenship.

But in all the survey the important thing that stood out was the evidence that the girl who goes to college remains single in a large percentage o the cases.

Whether her higher educational ac tivities have anything to do with he spinsterhood is open to question.

College education has nothing to d with the fact that many women g through life alone, according to Ru dolph M. Binder, professor of socio ogy in New York university, one c the largest coeducational schools in th country.

"These women who remain single," said Prof. Binder, "wouldn't have ma

"Dumb-Bells Out of Favor"

COLLEGE girls want to marry the brainy man. In a recent questionnaire sent to Vassar and Smith colleges the girls voted that the intellectual man was the most desirable type for a husband. Second place at Vassar was won by the home-loving man, while the athlete was the second choice at Smith.

One wide difference between the two colleges was shown in the vote on The up-to-the-minute man, who received preference over all others at Vassar, while the Smith girls preferred a compromise between the modern and old-fashioned man.

This discussion from the girls' side showing that the bluestocking does not need a handicap to compete on an equal basis with Dumb Dora is matched in a comprehensive way with the figures obtained from questionnaires compiled at Harvard, Princeton and Yale.

Princeton men favor the old-fashioned girl, while Yale and Harvard prefer a compromise between the old-fashioned girl and the flapper. In the total balloting the old-fashioned girl received 470 votes, while her flapper sister got 330. The girl who combined the best features of both had a plurality with a vote of 1225.

er Women For Wives?

"Beautiful But Dumb," Long Supposed to Be the Type Favored for Matrimonial Prizes---But Here Comes Prof. Binder, of New York University, to Tell Us Brains Are No Handicap in Marriage and Clever Women Are The Best Wives

f ried even if they had not had a college education. Instead of a college education being a handicap, it is a distinct advantage, and it is because these advantages have been recognized that the number of college women is increasing.

"There are two kinds of women who do not marry—those who won't marry and those who can't. The women who won't marry are indifferent to the mating call or they are minus a deep feeling for maternity. Those who can't marry want to very often, but they are so unattractive physically that no man is stirred to ask them.

"In the old days of tribal law or the reign of the family, the unmarried woman was practically a social outcast.

"When we come nearer to our own time the spinster, condemned to idleness by the prevailing code, had to live upon the bounty of a brother, uncle or other relative.

"But as the conventions changed, industry and the professions opened opportunity to women to make their lives count for something and to achieve economic independence. At the same time, colleges began to let down the bars and women began to make use of the advantages which culture and education give in making one's way in the world.

"A single woman may, nowadays, live a life of her own. In the old days she could not live at all. These women are made conspicuous by statistics concerning the marriage rate of college women, while the woman of the same type who does not go to college is unnoticed in the reckoning.

"Being smart is no handicap to a woman. A clever man knows he needs a partner of equal ability to help him make the best of his struggle in the world.

"And college is a place where a smart woman has a better chance to meet her own type of man than outside. It may be true that some college women find it difficult to marry because they feel that the men they know are beneath them, and I know of a few cases in my experience, but this is a very small proportion of the number of college graduates.

"Such cases are canceled many times by the number of brilliant women who have found in college life the opportunity to meet a higher grade of man than they could in the narrow circle of home or business."

According to Prof. Binder, the rise of college standards tends to eliminate from the college classes the girl whose chief concern is dolling up for the purpose of concentrating masculine attention upon her.

While there is no doubt that many girls consider their college days as sessions spent in a matrimonial agency, Prof. Binder asserts they must be, on the average, of higher mental grade than the woman outside, or they would never stand the pace until graduation day.

"The necessity of hard study causes the doll to drop from the college list," says Prof. Binder. "The girls who go to college hoping to win a husband as well as a diploma must be worth something themselves. College may be a social asset to them, but they can't realize on it unless they have assets of their own.

"Engagements result from the propinquity of men and women at college. I consider it advisable for a young man who has found a true life companion to become engaged while he is in college.

"Such an arrangement may, if permanent love is present, keep him from the many pitfalls of youth and the chances are favorable that if he is deeply in love with a fine girl he will keep clean for her sake.

"A boy should not marry while he is in college even if he is financially equipped to do so. He is not sufficiently mature to make a proper choice. The average college man is between 18 and 22 and has no idea of the importance of family life.

"I merely mention this in passing because college men marry later than boys who leave the public schools for business. This has social results which are beneficial to the college girl.

"The average boy who achieves a college education is unable to marry upon graduation. It is some years after commencement day before he thinks he has enough money to arrange a wedding day.

"Like the college man, the college girl marries later in life when reason is replacing impulse in the choice of companionship and it is this fact that is largely responsible for the lower divorce rate among the college-bred couples.

"A man rarely weds at thirty, the girl he might have ben willing to escort to the altar at twenty. Instinct and infatuation are disappearing as his mature mind is centering on success in his business or profession. He may often have to take his work home with him. A butterfly who insisted upon gadding about every night, would ruin his

MY LADY FAR AWAY

INSTALLMENT XIII.

THE who wished to sup of all humans experience seemed in a fair way to realize a good part of her dream that evening out on the lonely nameless lake, in company of a stone age woman. It grew dark with terrifying swiftness; the creature who sat in front of her, paddling like a machine, gave no reply to Martha's remarks, made more in the hope of creating a cheerful atmosphere than anything else. Even the magic "Sambio" wrought no response. The woman paddled, paddled. She was clearly doing her very best; was anxious to get home to somewhere or other, land her unexpected guest, captive—which was it?—in the village which, doubtless, she inhabited, together with a few score other women like herself, and a larger number of wild, fierce, painted and feathered men, very much like those who had almost done away with Martha and with Royden on that day that now seemed years ago.

A breath of something like fear crept over the adventurer in the back seat. Whither would this journey lead her?

No moon was in the sky, but stars were out. The canoe moved through a world of scattered diamond sparks. Each time the woman struck down her paddle she sent a thousand mirrored constellations flying from their orbits. Behind, two streaks of grayish light, like flaws in glass, fled always after the canoe, opening out V-shaped till they were lost in the distance. Otherwise it was dark; semi-transparent dark, through which one could see, faintly, the forms of lurking islands, the flesh of a leaping trout; but which bewildered, daunted as only the dark of the wild lands can.

Martha "was no church-goer," as she often said, in the self-congratulatory tone that generally accompanies the saying; but she could not help remembering now some fragments of church services, heard long ago, about "lighting one's darkness." They had resounded through a warmed, well lighted building, where one sat or pretended to kneel, in a cushioned pew, with a comfortable motor car waiting outside. . . . They gave one a pleasant sort of shiver, she remembered. She wished they would not haunt her now. The shiver had returned with the recollection, but it was by no means pleasant.

What—the—devil—had she gone with this woman for?

There was an answer to that; Martha's usual answer—"Thrills!" But it came upon her now with sudden force that if the thrills turned out to be the wrong kind, there was—for the first time in her life—nothing to stand between her and consequences. Always, Martha Lyle, as a pretty woman, a desirable woman, had found men ready to serve her, pull her out of troubles of all kinds. She had felt, instinctively, that fate would never be allowed to harm a person of her quality. She had, on that assumption, dared anything and everything; insomuch that she had grown to suppose herself the very soul of courage.

Now running across an unknown lake in company with a stone age woman, who was probably the wife of some head-hunting cannibal; bound for a destination at which she could not even guess, with all her men miles away, she realized that courage had never been hers at all. Like Gordon's coward, who

"Dared on a gallant horse
What he never would dare alone."

Martha, all her life since sixteen, had been

"Rejoicing in a borrowed force,
And a hardihood not her own."

Now the force was gone; her hot blood was cooled. She was most terribly afraid.

"Here, go back—take me back!" she cried to the dusky creature in front of her. The woman took no notice. Martha poked her with the point of a parasol. "How!" ejaculated the woman, like a kicked dog, and paddled faster.

"She doesn't understand—stop—STOP!" shouted Martha, grasping the bare shoulder before her. This produced a result; the woman halted, jabbered something that Martha judged to be a remonstrance, and then, seeing that she was not understood, made, in the starry dusk, a horrid pantomime with hands and teeth "You'll spill us, and the alligators will get us," was clearly, the translation of it.

"Oala?" cried Martha, using a word well nigh universal in some form or other about the coasts of Paqua. She knew that it meant alligator.

The woman nodded violently, repeating the word with a new intonation. She then pointed to the surface of the lake, where Martha could see, every here and there, a curious effect of clustered phosphorescent streaks. "Oala!" she said.

Martha was struck into silence; into deadly immobility. She feared alligators as she feared nothing else. They were all about her, as she floated unprotected in the thin canoe, with but a few inches of freeboard. They could spring up and seize her at any moment if they chose. Assuredly a spill out of that unstable, rolling craft would be the speedy end of everything. She sat, frozen in her seat, and made no more movement, no useless remonstrance. Wherever the woman was taking her, whatever she meant to do, nothing could be worse than these "dragons of the slime;" anything that took her away from their neighborhood must be welcome.

It was about this time that she began to realize the canoe was being followed.

At first, when she glanced nervously back into the semi-dark, she saw the pale, long streaks of alligators floating or swimming about in confusion, like a lot of luminous matches tossed haphazard into a basin of water. After a while, one seemed to detach itself from the others; she could see it lying apart by itself, very large and long, with such streams of phosphorescence surrounding it that one could almost have sketched its outline. It did not appear to be moving, but she noted, by and by, with a twinge of dismay, that it never seemed any further off; did not, like some of the others, fade away into distance A little longer, and she was almost sure it had caught up on them, was swimming, floating, rather, without apparent movement, just a little nearer. Then it was nearer still. Then she could see its twin, glowing eyes set before the faintly shining outline of—God, how great a shape!

She pulled at the woman; pointed back and screamed.

Immediately, as if it had, understood—but was there any if?—the alligator became dimmer, seemed to sink and disappear. The native woman, with a cluck of dismay, bent to her paddle, and worked hard. It seemed she did not like alligators that followed canoes any more than did Martha. Once she stopped for a moment to show her passenger, in brief pantomime, what she thought of the business. The alligator was hungry, according to her. She did not seem to want the company of hungry alligators. She paddled very hard

Martha looked back, confident that now the thing must be far behind. . . . and saw it rise, like a diver coming up from the bottom, right beside the canoe.

She was, in the old phrase that nothing can better, "struck to the heart." As if, a spear had passed through her, she fell back, screaming, such agony in all her body that she thought for a moment the brute had seized her. It was nothing but fear. She saw, with almost instant relief, that the alligator was not making for her, but for the stone age woman. Doubtless the smell of whites was unfamiliar to it; hungry as it was, it preferred its accustomed food.

The canoe tilted shockingly, so that water ran in as the alligator flung out of the lake, two webbed, nailed paws as big as dinner plates, and fastened on the gunwale. Then it performed its famous, hideous feat of "frightfulness" throwing wide its colossal jaws until it almost split itself asunder. Even in the starlight the rows of tusks, like teeth on a giant rake, showed pale and horrible, and the light, shiny lining of the monster's gullet faintly glittered.

This, the alligator's well known way of terrifying and paralyzing victims, took instant effect. The woman, menaced within inches by those awful jaws, swept by the monster's very breath—it stank like a ten days' corpse—gave one hopeless cry, flung up her hands, and fell over the edge of the canoe, unresisting. Martha saw the white undersoles of her dark feet as the alligator made one colossal snap at her, like a dog catching at a bone, and went down in a terrific swirl of oily water, the woman's head in his mouth. Then there was nothing at all, and the canoe was rocking as if it would capsize, on an empty stretch of lake, with the paddle floating close at hand and the stars looking calmly down from above.

By their pale light Martha could see what she had not noticed before—that she was close to an island. A small island with a little hill in the midst. There seemed to be no people, no houses. All around it lay the inevitable weed beds, bright with the starlight; but she knew she could get through them in her vessel of a few inches draught. Snatching up the paddle, she made her way as best she could to shore. The shocking death of the woman had frightened but not unnerved her; she realized that she herself was all the safer for it, and with Martha, self was everything. "Anyhow," she told herself, as she paddled with uncertain and clumsy strokes towards the low, grassy beach, "the wretch had no business to carry me off like that; why, goodness gracious, Hugh would have simply killed her if he had caught her at it. She has only got what she deserved." This made her feel a little more comfortable, but did not quite do away with the horrifying memory of the split jaws, incredibly huge, and the shining throat. "Things like that have no business to be alive in the world," she thought, indignantly. "Some one should shoot them all down."

The canoe grounded; she got out, pulled it up a little higher and made it fast by its hibiscus-fiber painter to an overhanging bough. A little, deserted fishing hut on the beach seemed to have been placed there for her especial comfort; it almost made her forgive her negligence of Providence in permitting the alligator. By the aid of a couple of matches she examined it. It was clean and dry; a bundle of grasses in one corner made a passable bed. This was not, she knew, the mosquito season; she might be able to pass a fairly comfortable night here. It could only be a night; with morning, everybody would be out on her track. (Martha rather liked the thought of that) and she would undoubtedly find herself safe on the Lahara, heroine of the hour, by lunch time. It wouldn't take long to get back again in the canoe, even if she was not found.

Lunch time made her think of food. She wondered whether the woman had had any in the canoe. It might be as well to look.

There was a cold fish and a bundle of bananas and yams. Taking them out, Martha noticed something small and bright wedged at the bottom of the canoe in a crack. It was her bracelet, stuck fast. "I'll get it tomorrow," she thought. Then she looked to see the fastening of the painter was all right. She had passed it between two tall stems of bamboo and twisted it around the larger of the stems. Nothing could be safer.

In the night the wind got up, beating the long pandanus leaves together with a sound like clicking and crossing of foils, hissing like a hundred snakes among the reeds, tearing in sudden angry gusts across the lake, so that you might have fancied those virgin solitudes invaded by scores of humming hydroplanes, each trying to rise at the same time.

Martha, with the door of the hut tied up, lay on her bed of grasses a trifle cold, more than a trifle frightened, and very sorry for herself. She was indignant again with that Providence to which she gave no name. She felt it—they—should somehow have managed better for her.

With the first gray of morning she was up, peering cautiously through openings in the plaited wall of the hut. So far as she could see, the lake was empty. That was well. She would get the canoe, start paddling at once, and be in sight of the Lahara within an hour! Surely nothing very much could happen in an hour!

She left the hut, walked briskly down to the grassy beach that lay below, and then stopped dead, her mouth falling open. There was no canoe.

At first she thought it had been stolen in the night; and the fancy sent a dart of fear through her. She was not much consoled when, on examining the place where the canoe had been tied, it becamt evident that the chafing of the bamboos in last night's wind had cut through the fragile painter, letting the little vessel go adrift. She could not, as she had intended, paddle away for the Lahara before any native was astir. It could not be very long before some of them would make their appearance on the lake. She must keep herself well out of sight—and how, in that case, was she to call for help? Three fires lit in a row was the universal Australian signal; that Hugh had told her once, and she remembered now. But there was no use remembering. One might as well send out invitations to all the lake villages at once as light three fires—or one fire.

"They'll find me—soon—some time," she said, a little dashed and not quite so certain as she would have wished. How many scores of islands and islets were there on the lake? How long would it take Hugh and the others (for, of course, every one would join) to find out the one where she was hiding? Martha withdrew into her hut, took the bit of fish and the banana, and tried to breakfast. She was frankly fond of her meals, but never had food, for her, had such little savor.

It was ten o'clock on the same day, when Smith, driving the Lahara fast across the Gagari side of the lake, saw that which Welch had once described to Martha—a vulture rendezvous of the tribes.

He could not mistake it; he had seen the thing before. From every part of the horizon within view the canoes were gathering, some paddling fast and frantically in the far distance, some moving more leisurely near at hand. There were canoes so far away that you could only see them as black fly specks on the water. There were canoes big as water beetles. There were canoes large as your hand, with visible heads and legs bobbing like piano jumpers inside; and there were some full sized, close, filled with warriors, every shell and bead and tooth of whose equipment Smith could note. But every one of these converging, from far or near, upon the selfsame point; and that point was a distant small island which, to Smith's certain knowledge, owned no population and no houses save a single half ruined fishing lodge.

He looked at the vulture crowd—risen as suddenly as a storm—seized the wheel of the Lahara, and signalling "full speed ahead," bore down on the island.

"Where the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together." Into the mind of the man called Smith flashed that famous saying, as he saw the canoes, right, left, far and near, gathering towards the island. Not for nothing had he lived among the Pelican river wilds all these years. He knew, as surely as if he had seen her, that Martha was on the island; that some sign of her presence had gone out, and that the natives, having marked it down, were racing one another from all corners of the lake to be first in.

They must know that she had been lost. Even if her captors had not talked, the movements of the Lahara and the whaleboat advertised that disaster to every corner of the lakes. Even if the native wireless had not been working, somebody, somehow, had found out that there was a white woman alone on the island. It would not be good for that woman that the canoes should win against the Lahara. Smith knew well enough that no actual ill intent was taking his dark friends out of their ordinary way; simple curiosity was quite enough to account for the vulture gathering—but he knew, too, that the head hunter is a mere bundle of ill-regulated impulses, a firework of jumpy nerves, ready to explode at anything and nothing. That you know him, like him, live with him for years without being able, more than on the first day, to prophesy his line of action in any given case. That you may tame the snake, lean on the viewless winds, read the runes written on the back of the slippery mackerel before you shall tame, rely on, read the heart of the head-hunter.

These people might make a queen or a corpse, a pet or a picnic of Martha within the next fifty minutes; there was no telling—unless one did the telling oneself. And that was just what Smith proposed to do.

There was not much of middle age about him in that moment, as he steered the Lahara towards the little island, taking advantage of channels scoured by currents in the bed of the lake, of deeps beneath precipitous shores, to get the yacht across where no one else would have dared to take her. He knew very well that one sandbank struck, one channel missed, would be the end of everything; it was literally touch and go with them all. But he carried the map of the lake bottom in his head, knew every bearing, night and day, could tell just what each tributary stream was doing or had done to the main volume of water . . . . A great geographer had died in Smith; he knew it, and cared not at all, except insofar as he found the fact of use in rescuing Martha Lyle. Within the last week ten years had dropped from him; he held himself straighter, stood more firmly; his shoulders had lost the careless stoop of the recluse; his eyes were strangely bright. Color had come back to the white-wax cheeks; the parchment lips were lit once more with warm blood. The man was unhappy—fire and fever ravaged his veins, drew deep new lines upon his face—but his very unhappiness had made him, in those few days, a man instead of a mere pale shell of humanity brooding over a grave.

With his long beard flying in the wind made by the Lahara, and the wheel in his mighty hands and that strange, new light upon his face, he made a wild but impressive figure who well might have touched the imagination of poet or painter. Neither was there, however; only the mop-headed Motuan natives who chewed betelnut, stared at the speeding canoes, and told each other with a sly glance now and then towards the Big Chief, that he was surely "kava-kava"—that word which covers so much—anger, love, madness, folly, and last, not least, the battle-rage that is also, in its essence, "fey."

Bitterly, at that moment, the Chief was feeling the loss of the nameless power to which he had, in years of study, attained. Not for him was it, now, to call those wild tribes back to heel, as he had done for this woman and her man, weeks earlier, send, through the air, the secret messages that are no secret at all to stone age savages, but mystery itself to civilized men. He had reached this knowledge only by ways of extreme difficulty; and when once the fine poise of his mind was overthrown, destroyed, by Martha and the emotional earthquakes she loved to raise, he knew himself divested of all occult power. Not for ever, he hoped—no . . . But it might as well have been forever, on this day, when life, and more than life, might hang upon his calling off the wild men of the lake, in time.

In spite of all that he could do, a crowd of canoes got to the island before he did. He mastered his wild impatience; saw the anchor safely dropped, swung out a boat, and then drove the rowers furiously up to the grassy beach. There was a canoe moored there; an empty one which the natives had been taking along; a small, woman's canoe, from the Gagari villages. In the bottom of it lay the simple-seeming thing that had set the lake country on fire—Martha's forgotten and abandoned parasol.

More and more savages were landing every minute. Their behavior was so like that of hounds in the hunting field that Smith, on any other occasion, might have been moved to strange recollections of his youth. Three or four active and vocal youths led the way, giving tongue delightedly when they picked up scent—a footmark, a handkerchief, a snapped stick or broken vine—and casting about when it failed. The mass of canoemen, older and less speedy, came behind, each doing his best to outrun the others. The field amounted to near a hundred by the time Smith was in the midst of them; and he knew better than to attempt any interference before they found their quarry. He could only strain heart and lungs to their utmost, keeping well forward, and trusting to luck. Luck, however, was treacherous; no check came to favor his middle-aged slowness, the canoemen outran him one by one, and when the hounds, with a yell that rent the skies, came upon their wretched hare, Smith was still some way behind.

He could scarcely breathe or see when he caught up with the pack, but that which met his eyes cleared his sight and made him unconscious of laboring lungs. Martha was between two natives whom Smith recognized as the leading men of the Gagari tribe, wealthy and important. Each had seized one of her hands and was pulling violently against the other as if in a tug of war. The woman's hat was off, her clipped ash-blonde head in full view; her eyes were half shut, mouth falling open, but she had not fainted. Once, in a lull of the general shouting, Smith heard her shriek.

The sound drove him mad. Like a bursting wave he flung himself through the savages who stood around the two chiefs, greedily interested in the dispute between their leaders. He caught the arm of the nearest chief and cried in the native tongue: "Hold, hold, you are thieving!"

Now, you may call a primitive savage anything you like in the way of murderer, cannibal, general villain and rogue—he will accept it all as the highest of compliments. But if you, knowing his language and able to select the finer shades of insult, brand him as a thief, he will be both hurt and enraged. The two chiefs slacked their hold long enough to turn and ask indignantly: "What's this you call us, companion? We haven't stolen anything."

"But you have," cried Smith. "You have stolen foully. Since when have the Gagari taken away other men's brides, the brides of their friends, not yet fully paid for?"

"Ou, ou, the fat white man is no friend of ours."

"No—nor mine. But I am your friend, and this is my bride."

"Ou, ou, ou!" She is yours? We thought——"

"You thought wrong. Mine."

The men had drawn back a little; one of them, a wild figure with a fibre tail swinging behind him as he moved, and a coronet of tall golden paradise plumes upon his shaven poll, was staring at Martha literally "as if he could eat her." On her head especially, her little ash-blonde shingled head, his fierce eyes were fixed.

"Companion," he said coaxingly, "do not disappoint us; surely one woman is as good as another—and you have never troubled about any of them, till now. If she is yours, let us buy her. We will pay well, more than you have given to the big white man for her. We have no such head as this, or ever had, in our clubhouse—and also, she is young and tender. None of us have ever eaten white man. It will be good for all the village if you let us have her."

"Ou!" shouted the other chief. "You talk like a boobook owl. I will buy her, and she shall be my wife! I have very few wives left. She is not very ugly," in a hold-cheap tone. "Not nearly so ugly as you are, companion——" to Smith.

"You are all talking nonsense," pronounced Smith, who was beginning now to realize that he could, with luck, hold the situation. "I tell you she is my bride; I have only just paid enough to the big white man to be allowed to take her home. There is more yet to pay, according to custom, but now she is mine—and do you think I will let you steal her before my eyes? Are you thieves—thieves?" He repeated the word scornfully.

A native with curious, deformed feet all melted into one like the feet of the Scotch brownie, slipped silently away. He had been a garden thief in his younger years. He had been caught, and his feet, held in the fire for punishment, told the tale to all who cared to look. He was sensitive, this exgarden thief; he did not want to listen to talk about thieving.

"There," said Smith, seizing his moment and pointing dramatically to the wretched cripple, "there—that is how you serve the man who steals a yam. And you were about to steal my valuable, expensive wife! No, you will not do that, I am sure."

"Of course," he added, as if to himself, "these people have been very busy all morning paddling about in their canoes and they are tired and hungry. It would be as well to kill a pig or two for them."

The chief with the fibre tail held up five fingers.

"Five pigs, I suppose," agreed Smith. "And a string of dogs' teeth each for the two men who caught her. It seems she has been running away from me. It is very bad for women to run away before they are paid for and taken home." He placed his arm about Martha, somewhat roughly, as if to hold her prisoner. "Play up," he hissed in her ear. Half dead with terror, she had revived at the sight of one of her men coming to the rescue; restoring normal hues, normal conditions to life. She was almost ready to taste the salt tang of adventure through her very tears. . . . "You've run away—I've caught you—you're frightened," were the directions she heard. Instantly she registered like a Hollywood star, dragging away from her captor, weeping noisily. "Keep it up," she caught. He cuffed her lightly over the ear. She cried. The crowd, mercurial, unstable as only a savage crowd can be, now roared with laughter. They could appreciate this sort of humor.

But Smith, looking at them over his shoulder, seeing the surge and the sway of the naked mob, all brown and shining with sweat, all tinkling with teeth and shells, holding their six foot bows still ready in one hand, thought the moment very far from safe as yet. He knew—none better—how suddenly, causelessly, the whole body of laughing men might catch at another idea, toss it like a ball from one to another, wake roaring to new possibilities, and make an end of both of them. In swift emergencies minds move swiftly. He had hardly caught sight of the magistrate's boat moving over the water toward the island, hardly noted that Hopper and his boys alone were in it, before a shining plan took possession of him.

The natives were surging about aimlessly, fingering their bows and watching the white man and woman. Smith spoke roughly to Martha, keeping up an appearance of anger. In reality, he was telling her what he meant to do.

"You can't fool these people—not for long," he said. "They will find out I have been deceiving them, and then it'll be the end. (Dodge when I threaten; look more scared.) It's a case of really marrying. Let the R. M. fix it up as soon as he comes. Half caste witnesses—the engineers on the yacht. Eh, what about it? He did not dream that this maddening, delightful creature would have looked at him under any other circumstances; but now—now—why, fate had fairly cast her into his hands!

Bricks Without Straw

fields with a rumbling snarl. Two pale blue charabancs stormed up the dusty stretch; dogs in the manger, they held the crown of the road; from the rear of the second, two men, wearing women's hats, derided the occupants of a following car; behind the car a dark red racer was chafing and furiously employing an ear-splitting horn.

Nadege turned away.

"Why is life so beastly?" she said. "So beastly and hard and cruel? I've been all right; people have treated me kindly wherever I've gone, but I've seen so much ill feeling, such—such squalor, such needless pain. I stayed in rooms once where the husband was out of work. He cleaned my shoes and carried up my hot water and actually mended my trunk. Nobody could have been nicer. One day the police came and took him, for 'grievous bodily harm.' His wife jeered at him from the landing while he was going on. It appeared he'd half killed a night watchman who lived next door. Why? Because the man's wife had boasted that, when the hot weather came, they should go to the sea."

"I'm sorry you've seen such things," said Medmenham. "Life out of joint is dreadful, and, once you've seen it, the slightest whiff of disorder brings it back."

"That's right," said the girl. "Study Hogarth enough, and only a constable will take the taste from your mouth. That's why these woods and meadows have helped me so. As for that orchard . . . Let's go back there, Dominick. I'm sorry to be so capricious, but I've—I've seen so much of Hogarth that—well, I'm glad of a change."

"My poor lady."

Nadege forced out a laugh.

"It's the contrast—that's all. I used to live so soft. But I can t complain, really. I do very well."

"I'm sure of that," said Medmenham. "And the first chance you get I'm sure you'll go right away. Will you take me on as your chauffeur when you're a star?"

"No. I think I'll build a house here and give it to you. And that would be useless. Why did Sir John turn you down?"

"We had a disagreement," said Medmenham, "and he went off the deep end."

Nadege stopped in her tracks and laid a hand on his arm.

"Tell me the truth," she said. "Was it because our engagement was broken off?"

"It was," said Medmenham. "But——"

Nadege clapped her hands to her eyes.

"I knew it," she moaned. "I knew it. O, Dominick, how you must hate me! How you must——"

"My dear Nadege, what has it to do with you? How can you blame yourself for the utterly reasonless whim of a man tormented with gout?"

Nadege uncovered her face and stared at the sky.

"And you wait upon me," she said. "You play the part of a servant to the woman who's smashed your life."

"'A servant!' Because, by the police regulations, I have to sit outside and you in the cab? My dear, what nonsense. Besides, between friends . . . And now let's get back to your meadow and sit in the sun."

In silence they crossed the bridge and passed through the smiling fields.

'Needless pain," said the girl. "You see, I belong to Hogarth. I'm typical of that vile world I condemn. Those two men in the charabanc made me feel sick and tired, and I ought to have been by their side."

Medmenham stood still.

"I refuse," he said quietly, "to let you talk like this. We both know the facts. Because you found me exacting, you broke our engagement off. Whether I was or was not, you were wholly within your rights. More. You did the right thing, Nadege. No girl should ever marry against her will. To saddle yourself with what happened——"

"What of the woman who boasted that she should go to the sea? An idle, unkind word—see what havoc it made. You can't say she wasn't to blame. Of course she was. She couldn't foresee what would happen, but who ever can? She just did a rotten thing, and bred the most frightful misery as the result."

"But, my dear, you did right." Nadege stared. "She spoke out of careless ill will; she wanted her neighbors to feel that she was better to do, so she put it across them—a common but unkind act. But you were doing your duty."

"My duty?"

"Your absolute duty. I don't care how far things have gone, it's not the game to marry a man you don't love."

Nadege stood like statuary; she seemed to have stopped breathing; her eyes, which were fixed upon a hedgerow, plainly saw nothing at all.

Suddenly, without a word, she turned to continue her way.

In that moment, I think, she touched bottom; the waters of Retribution passed over her head; Dominick had spiked her last gun; she could not even turn it upon herself.

Arrived at the head of the meadow, she sat herself down.

"Tell me of yourself," she said dully. "I want to know how you live."

The man told her faithfully a cheerful, prosperous tale. His life was full and amusing. If it was also hard, he hid the fact. He made good money, would soon have paid for his cab. Foul weather was trying, but brought much grist to the mill. He had four regular clients, two of whom were old ladies that feared the streets, had twice driven royalty and once a man to the bank he was going to rob. His fares interested him. The comfortable ignorance with which Propriety lay back on the cushions which Scandal had just left amused him to death.

The lively account took Nadege out of herself; the pleasant peace of the landscape ministered to her soul; soon she was looking and listening with a smile on her lips; in an hour they were talking easily, remembering bygone days.

The sun was sinking when the girl picked up her hat.

"Time, Dominick," she said, settin her hair to rights. "I shall have to be getting back."

"To your rooms? Why on earth? Let's find a small inn and ask for a country tea."

Nadege shook her head.

"I can't do that," she said, slowly. "You've given me the most perfect day I've ever spent. And now I must go." She rose. "I shall never forget it—never. Or how very sweet you were. I'm very grateful."

Medmenham looked up at her face.

"Perhaps, some day, Nadege, you will let me bring you again."

"Perhaps, some day."

Medmenham got to his feet and put out his hands. The girl put her fingers within them without a thought.

"And please don't become a great lady before your time. I mean, when I've something to offer, I'm going to ask you again. When I've four or five cabs on the streets and don't have to drive. . . . That means a good income, Nadege. I can't ask you to wait—I know that. And I daresay it's hopeless, and I know that I'm out of court. You can't post-date some statements, and that's what I've done. But, O, Nadege, I just wanted you to know that I love you—love you far better, darling, than ever before, and God knows when I'll get a chance of telling you so again."

He kissed her hands hungrily. When he raised his head he saw the look in her face.

"Nadege!"

She nodded.

"I love you, Dominick. I always did. I was mad, I think, that night. I'd meant to make you protest, insist on your rights. You were so gentle and easy; I wanted to get a rise. So I played and lost, and doubled and lost again. And at last I staked all I had. . . . It was rotten and mean and senseless. But I was like that. But I'm not any more, Dominick."

The man drew her into his arms and kissed her lips. She went on wistfully.

"When I've got a job in London, I'll let you know. And then, if you still want me, dear, I'll be your wife."

Medmenham held her off and looked into her eyes.

"Do you really love me?" he said.

"Yes, Dominick."

'Then give up your tour. Give up your prospects and marry me, poor as I am. I've a tiny flat, I told you, and I can keep us both. It won't be very exciting; I'm afraid it'll be rough. A servant's out of the question. But, if you can stick it, Nadege, you'll make my life. I need you. I've no one now. When I come in, soaked to the skin, I have to light my fire, lay it sometimes and then light it; I must have warmth. But I often go hungry to bed, because I'm too tired to set about getting a meal. I know I'm asking a lot, but——"

Nadege put her arms round his neck and burst into tears. Not for five minutes could she control her voice. Then, "Let's sit down," she whispered.

With his arm about her shoulders, she began to speak very low.

"I never knew that men loved women like this. I don't think they do. Of course, you know that I'm broke. The moment you saw me you knew that I was down and out. I saw it in your eyes, heard it in all you said. You knew I was out of a job. Yet I might be a leading lady, the way that you've treated me. The question was how to save me—I've seen it all. How to spare my feelings, yet save me still. Your feelings didn't count. And, in the end, you ask me to do you the favor of becoming your wife. You point out how much it will help you if I will give up my career to cook your food, lay yourself open to a standing reproach, deliberately stigmatize yourself, in order that I may anchor without hauling down my pride."

"I don't seem to have been very clever," said Dominick, thoughtfully. "And in common decency I must decline the crown. Our marriage will be one of convenience. You're sick and tired of the sordid, and I don't like living alone."

"My dear, I'm a beggar. I've fourteen shillings and sixpence, and I'm short of a job."

"And I of a housekeeper. I can't afford one. But I can run to a wife." He slid a hand into his pocket and brought out a ring. "And there's the reward of virtue. If you hadn't picked this up——"

Nadege gave a cry of delight.

"I had to, Dominick. It—it seemed so awful to leave such a stone on the floor. Why didn't you sell it?"

"Because, to restore it to me, you had to stoop. That made it a document. 'I beg your pardon,' it said. And I valued that very much."

Nadege caught his hand to her heart.

"Faithful to a dream," she said.

"Perhaps," said Domonick. "But, you see, my sweet, it's come true."

It was some ten days later that Sir John Medmenham swallowed and dabbed at the Daily Glass.

"Have you seen this, Forsyth?"

"Your son's marriage to Miss Lambert? I have."

"What the devil does it mean?"

"If I'm to speak frankly Sir John, I think it means this: The first match was made for them, and that's why it came to naught, but this one they made themselves."

"Bricks without straw," said Sir John. "They haven't a penny piece."

"Maybe," said Forsyth, quietly. "But those sort of bricks will last. They're not easy to make, but . . ."

Sir John frowned.

"The point is, what's to be done. I'm ready to let bygones be bygones, but what about that woman?" He wrinkled his nose. "Plenty of straw in that brick. Poor old Lambert. We found together at Harrow in '76."

The lawyer fingered his chin.

"I think if she's left to herself she'll see the worldly wisdom of coming round."

"What d'you mean?"

"They've a flat in a mews off Mount street. I should think it's being stormed now. They were both very popular, you know. If Mrs. Lambert stands out she'll be ostracized."

Sir John sat back in his chair.

"Have you got the address?" he said. "I don't mind being ostracized, but I'm damned if I'll follow her lead."

He called on his daughter-in-law on the following day.

The latter and Lady Sue Fustian were laying linoleum in the bathroom and doing it very well.

Nadege led him into the kitchen politely enough.

"Thank you very much for coming," she said. "Dominick's out with his cab."

"Your father and I," said Sir John, "were very old friends. It gives me great pleasure to know that you bear my name."

"I'm an unprofitable daughter," said Nadege.

"My dear, that's largely my fault. I looked too hard at the settlements and not hard enough at your eyes. You must forgive me. And I don't at all like Dominick's driving a cab."

"That's my fault, Sir John. I broke the engagement, you know."

"I'm afraid it was I who—er—reduced him to the ranks. At any rate, between us we upset things. Will you help me to put them right?"

"Of course I will."

"I have to go to Vichy at the end of the week. I want you and him to come and take charge of Black James while I'm away. If he likes to work later on, I won't stand in the way. But I don't like his driving a cab. The streets are dangerous."

"You ask me to help myself to something I don't deserve."

"That's a way conspirators have." He rose to his feet. "Give him this note from me and plead my cause. And I'll call for you tomorrow at 4 o'clock. We'll walk round to ——'s and inspect the family jewels."

Nadege took his hand in both hers.

"I let you down once," she said. "I'll never do it again."

Sir John stooped and kissed her.

"It's perfectly plain," he said, "that

To save her life she must take him.

"Yes," gasped Martha, too much amazed, too deeply shaken by the adventures of the last few minutes to realize that her objective was actually gained without trouble on her part, or difficulty with Hugh—after all! "Yes."

Hugh Royden meanwhile had gone off on a false scent.

It was all owing, in the last ultimate, to that news of accession to the title which Hopper accidentally had brought. Royden would have been more than human if he had not been uplifted by the knowledge that he was now at last a peer and a rich man; that careful ways and contrivances, making things do, waiting on the will of other men, were not for him any more. That it was for him now to consider the responsibilities of wealth, learn to distribute wisely, make the weight of his position and his possessions felt just as they ought to be felt; leave other men to wait upon and court his will. He felt himself able for it all, if a little sobered by it. He felt—as most men in like position do feel—that he had deserved this of Providence; that Heaven was showing, on the whole, excellent judgment.

Through the tired, white clarity of mind that comes of a sleepless night, these thoughts went and came, not disputing place with the one terrible anxiety that had possession of him, but underlying it, softening its edge. For he could not believe now that this kindly Heaven would be cruel to him. He could not feel that Martha, in the end, would be lost. He could see her rescued, scolded a little, perhaps; told of the glorious news, going back with him all the long way to civilization, marrying him, making a figure—what a figure she would make!—in English society, in Australia. . . .

He could see all that, but somehow he could not see himself in a home with her. There was no picture of Royden Castle—new, but judiciously subdued to appearance of age, dusk, firelit, cozy in the winter evenings, the big skin and antler decorated hall a-scramble with dogs and boys—his boys, his dogs—Martha in a tea gown, behind a tea tray. . . . No, he wanted the picture, tried to make it, but it would not come. Instead he saw a woman, not quite so young as she had been, but exquisite, sophisticated, charming—the word went with Martha as inevitably as honey with bee—yes, charming. Charming every one, delighting every one. Tactful, clever; managing every one. No dogs rioting about her filmy skirts; no boys shouting and stamping on the stairs of her well ordered home. Martie didn't care for animals; wouldn't speak of or to children. Hugh surmised, uncomfortably, that she hated them.

"Cad" he admonished himself. "Cad!—to criticize her when she's probably in a most hideous mess." But he could not quite forget that the mess was in all probability due to Martha's notorious imprudence.

The sum of it was that he brought himself back sharply from thought and dreams, came down to solid earth again, and at once began to quarrel with Hopper. Yesterday, last week, he would not have resented Hopper's official airs. He would only have laughed if this rakish fellow in khaki had "put it over" him, as he was doing now, telling him where to go when they landed on an island, what to say to the natives through the interpreter. He would have understood—being a man by no means devoid of natural sympathy—that Hopper had lived so long and so exclusively among natives as to lose in some degree his sense of proportion, much as a schoolmaster, for almost the same reasons, may, and often does, lose it.

But this was not yesterday. Hugh Royden had landed on a big, forested island, accompanied by two or three of Hopepr's armed police, and started a systematic beat of the whole place. Hopper had taken the whaleboat off to another island, which he maintained to be the likelier of the two.

"If you find any traces, fire three shots, and I'll come along," directed Hopper. "Be careful about ambushes. Don't shoot unless you——"

"My good man, I was through the war," replied Hugh, restraining himself with some difficulty.

Hopper saw him plunge into the forest before he himself reembarked in the whaleboat and, with diminished crew, set forth towards the other island. He intended to run rapidly round it, looking for signs of unusual disorder, and, if nothing of the kind appeared, make for the next. One could not go over all the islands in the lake, unless one had time to burn—which was precisely not the case. But one could, he thought, pick out the likeliest, if one knew as much about native tribes as an R. M. in charge of a district ought to know. He would back himself any day——

At that point the self-gratulations of Hopper, R. M., stopped short; his ideas of his own detective abilities were rudely shaken. For, over the top of a high island that temporarily blocked his view, came sounds—faint, yet clearly audible—of three consecutive shots.

"Damme," he swore, "the big chap with the beard has beat us both to it." And he shouted fiercely, "Up main sail—up jib! Kareharega!" (be quick). For he had seen something that he did not like—the beginning of the vulture swoop of the canoes.

Before the whaleboat was well under sail, skating slantwise across the windy lake beneath the now vivid and fiery sun, that sinister gathering had swelled, rolled, as a snowball rolls, up to amazing proportions. Hugh Royden, sweating through the bush on a false errand, with an ax and rifle ready, saw nothing of it; did not even hear the signal shots. It was certainly not his fault; but Hopper swore joyously at him for an ignorant fool as he ran his whaleboat toward the center of the commotion. Then he forgot all about Royden before the sight that met him on the beach.

became known somehow or other, and a day or two later I read a newspaper paragraph under the heading, "Chaliapine's latest scandal."

"Yes," was my reflection, "I shall have to cause many more such scandals though they won't do any good."

By this time, my artistic reputation had increased to the extent of receiving an offer to appear in America. This came in the shape of an engagement to sing at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York city, during the season 1907-08. I signed a contract which called for appearances in "Mefistofele," "Faust," "The Barber of Seville" and "Don Giovanni."

My next ordeal consisted of rehearsals at the Opera House, closely followed by my first appearance there, which took place on November 20, 1907, in Boito's "Mefistofele." On that occasion as in many subsequent performances, my companions in the cast included Riccardo Martin, and Geraldine Farrar.

My stay in America was short and far from happy. My artistic ideals were misunderstood, my performances were adversely criticised and, in general, it seemed, that I was looked upon artistically, as a barbarian. Complete ignorance of the English language prevented me from establishing sympathetic contact, to any extent, with natives of the great country—America.

For these reasons and also to avoid repetitions that might bore the readers of these pages, I will postpone discussing matters American until a later chapter, beginning with my return to New York in the autumn of 1921.

Do Men Prefer Clever Women For Wives?

chances for future progress because he needs a sensible woman who has some knowledge of his problems and is able to give him the companionship of a ripened mind.

"A college education means later marriage. Later marriage means a better and more conscious choosing of a partner for life and this means less divorce.

"Under these circumstances it is easy to see that college is no handicap but an investment, which gives a woman chances for a large return.

"Men who make fine headway in winning the prizes of life often owe their success to their wives as well as to their own efforts. The average college woman finds no difficulty in keeping pace with the growth of her husband. This avoids the mental separation which is a frequent cause of divorce after a man has struggled upward to success. The coed has a knowledge of the world and of social graces which are never without some value to the man she marries.

"Many college girls come from small towns and never go back because they want to marry in the social strata above that of their own family and the men they know at home. They realize if they return there is little opportunity of lifting themselves to a set on their own mental level, so they stay in the metropolitan environment, where the marriage opportunities are better.

"College girls usually marry college men. It may seem otherwise because of the occasional spectacular elopement of a college boy with a chorus girl, but in the average case, the girl who gets him has been a fellow student or is an alumnae of some institution of higher learning.

"In marrying college men girls obtain husbands who provide better for them than the men could who have not had a college education. The boy who goes to work without a university stamp on him reaches the peak of his earning powers around 25 and his income begins to decline around the age of 50.

"The college man begins to earn around the age of 25 and he is increasing his income largely when that of the working man has started to drop.

"As a college man finds the best type of woman for him to marry in the smart college girl, and as the college girl finds in the college man the type best able to realize her ideas of a home and companionship, there is obviously nothing left of the ancient suspicion that men fear smart women.

"Some men fear smart women, but it is not a charge that can be placed against the college man.

"I have heard it said that the college girl is a 'bossy' woman, but what applies to the spinster applies to her. There are domineering women who have been to college and there are domineering women who haven't. It is a type of personality that has nothing to do with education, and any one who has seen how many little women manage big men know that education is not responsible for their desire to command.

"And to come to a final point. There is at least a suspicion that many girls are so smart their husbands never find it out. They have their will and their way without fuss or fighting and they lead their husbands on to success in life without ever disclosing their share of the achievement. A girl smart enough to do this is clever enough to get the husband she wanted. In such matrimonial maneuvering whose chances are more favorable than the smart college woman?"

peated the doctor soothingly. "Can you drive an automobile?".

Ford said he could not. The doctor paced the floor. The youth in his story related that Mrs. Walsh, a young woman twenty years the doctor's junior, came in during the conversation.

"Isn't this terrible," she said. "The doctor never had anything like this happen before. She must have had heart failure."

The distressed young man left the doctor's house at 11:30 Sunday night, he said, Dr. Walsh telling him to telephone him at 6 o'clock Monday night. Dr. Walsh told him, he said, to get Edith's clothes from the landlady. He tried to do this, but the landlady refused to give them up.

And that, said Ford, was all he knew about the whole business. The next thing he knew was when he saw Edith Greene's picture in the newspapers under headlines telling of finding of the dismembered body by a cemetery wall.

"Poor Edith!" he moaned. "She is dead. The least I can do now, I guess, is to make what amends I can by telling the whole truth about it. It doesn't matter how much I have to suffer now."

By this time an autopsy had been performed and it disclosed, according to the police, that Edith Greene had probably died during the "anniversary party" in the doctor's home.

The name of Dr. Thomas E. Walsh was not unknown to the police. The records showed that he had frequently been in trouble in connection with his practice. In May, 1912, he was held for a time as a suspicious person in an abortion case. In 1920 he had been indicted for an abortion operation on a Cambridge girl but the case had not been prosecuted. In 1921 his license was revoked following a fatal illegal operation. A little later he had been found not guilty of violation of the federal narcotic law.

And in September, 1923, following a complaint by the state board of registration in medicine that Walsh was practicing without a license, he had been convicted and fined $200.

The police raided Dr. Walsh's home as soon as they learned of Ford's confession, only to find that the doctor had vanished. He surrendered three days later, just as Dr. Robb had surrendered in the Wolschendorf case. Walsh hired John F. Feeney, the criminal lawyer who had saved Dr. Robb from a long prison term in that other case which was so similar to this.

Dr. Leo Hanson, formerly of Boston, was suspected of having participated in dismembering the body and was arrested in New York, but subsequently was absolved of any connection in the case. Mrs. Walsh, the doctor's wife, was also involved in charges, but she, too, was released.

Dr. Walsh was admitted to bail. His trial followed in December, with Ford the state's principal witness against him. The accused man stood charged with performing an illegal operation and also with having caused the girl's death.

The Verdict.

After 18 hours and 15 minutes' deliberation the jury returned a verdict. They found the doctor guilty of having performed a criminal operation but freed him on the charge of causing Edith Greene's death. The jury had wrangled interminably over the question of whether or not to convict the man on this more serious charge, a charge which called for a maximum sentence of twenty years in state prison, at hard labor.

So the Robb case was being repeated. Dr. Robb, the reader may remember, served only forty months, most of the time as a physician in charge of the prison hospital.

Judge Winifred D. Gray, before whom the trial had taken place in Superior Criminal court in Suffolk county, granted a postponement pending the imposition of the sentence. On the day Dr. Walsh was to appear to hear the sentence, he vanished for the second time.

He was missing a month. During most of this time he voluntarily imprisoned himself in an apartment on 157th street, the Bronx, fearing to appear on the streets lest he be recognized by detectives and haled back to Boston. At the and of this time he wrote to Thomas J. Foley, who had succeeded District Attorney Thomas C. O'Brien, prosecutor of the case, offering to return.

And so Dr. Walsh, once eminent in his profession, now broken and a prisoner before the bar, appeared before Judge Gray and spoke meekly, asking for mercy.

Judge Gray, however, was not inclined to be sympathetic with this defendant. In fact, his words before pronouncing sentence indicated that in his opinion Massachusetts justice had failed woefully in this case.

"The statutes limit me to a maximum term of seven years in this case," he said, "owing to the fact that the jury found the defendant not guilty of responsibility for the girl's death.

"However, I cannot understand how the jury escaped the logical conclusion that death naturally ensued from the illegal act of the doctor.

"In 1921 the state board of registration of medicine revoked his license to practice. He has also been before this court and in the federal court for violations of the drug law. That charge was filed in this court and in the federal court, there apparently was no sentence. So, considering those facts at the time this offense occurred, the doctor had ceased to practice.

"If the evidence in this case is to be believed, and I believe it is, it showed that this man representing himself to young Ford as a person engaged in this sort of practice. It is not a case of a lone occurrence. There is nothing in the evidence or in his previous record that recommends anything but a severe sentence.

"I am satisfied that the doctor used this base means, at least in part, of gaining a livelihood. I believe he did it for money and nothing else."

Judge Gray then imposed sentence —six to seven years in state prison, at hard labor.

That was on the afternoon of January 18, 1927. Dr. Walsh became Prisoner No. 902, occupying what had been the last vacant cell in that old prison.

Ford had been out on bail all this time, charged with being an accessory but with the sentencing of Walsh he was released.

Long since the remains of Edith Greene had gone to a $15 grave paid for by the state, in the cemetery of the Field of Mary.

Stop Whiskey

By John's Wife

I'm the happiest little woman
In all this little town;
And my merry laugh and singing
Takes the place of sigh and frown.
For JOHN HAS QUIT HIS DRINKING
And is like himself once more.
And the world is just a paradise
With such happiness in store

One day I read some verses—
"Mary's Miracle," the name,
And I said, that's John exactly,
And I'll send and get the same.
So I sent for GOLDEN TREATMENT,
(As sly as sly could be)
And I put it in John's supper
And I put it in his tea.

And it didn't taste a little bit;
Had no odor, so, you see—
It was smoothest kind of sailing
For little Doctor Me.
And I watched and prayed and waited,
(And cried some, too, I guess),
And I didn't have the greatest faith,
I'm ashamed now to confess.

And John never thought a minute
He was being cured of drink,
And soon he's as well as any one,
It makes me cry to think!
Just makes me cry for gladness,
I'm so proud to be his wife—
Since he is cured of drinking,
And leads a nice, new life.

"Since John he quit a-drinking!"
I can't say it times enough!
And hates and loathes a liquor
As he would a poison stuff.
And when I say my prayers at night
As thankful as can be—
I pray for John the most of all—
Then GOLDEN TREATMENT.

you and I are going to get on very well."

After a word with Lady Sue he took his leave.

At the entrance to the mews he paused. "Forsyth was right," he murmured. "Nothing like bricks without straw." He rubbed his nose reflectively. Strange fellow, Fate. By cutting them off that woman and I seem to have done the right thing."

Three weeks had gone by and Black James was basking in the sunshine, like an old hound.

On the balustrade of the terrace sat Nadege, her eyes roving luxuriously over the famous park. Its deer, its timber, its bracken, its light and shades made her a pageant of which she would never tire. Beneath their constant ministry her memories of Hogarth were growning dim.

The girl was happy as only those are happy who have been given the original of their most precious dream. She clung to her husband like a child, would have fought for him like a tigress, woke of nights and wept over him out of sheer joy.

Dominick emerged from the library, letter in hand.

"From Forsyth," he said, coming across the flags.

"'. . . I have heard from Mrs. Lambeth's solicitors. They say, "In the circumstances there seems to be no reason why the deed of settlement should not be executed in substantially the same form as that which was finally approved." I hope you will agree with them, as I do.'" . . .

"As we were," sighed Nadege. But I owe you ten months, Dominick. I stole ten months of your life."

The man put her hand to his lips.

"You're paying me back, my darling, a hundredfold. If you remember, I wanted some of your time."

Make Your Own Christmas Greetings By Using These Designs and Verses

Wouldn't it be nice if your friends could get Christmas cards from you this year that you had made yourself? Well, they can! Here are instructions for making some simple little greeting cards that will be very pretty and appropriate.

A sheet of heavy paper, buff or light grey in color, will give the best effect when colored. Rule off the sizes desired on the wrong side of the paper and follow the lines when tearing out each card. Sizes hould be chosen to correspond with the envelopes that you will use.

The design on the card may be drawn with pencil and gone over later with waterproof India ink. Use either water color or crayon to color.

Coloring.

On the first card use red for the candle, black for the candle holder, and green for the holly leaves, with red berries. Make the flame bright yellow with a tiny dot of red in the center.

On the next card the stocking should be red with yellow stripes, and the horn bright yellow with a green band around it. The doll has black hair and a bright red dress with white collar. (If colored paper is being use, white chalk or Japanese white water color will color the collar.)

The house on the next card may be light yellow with plenty of white snow on the roof and all about. Make the tree very dark green or black, with a patch of grey-blue sky behind the house.

The little tag to be attached to a gift has a red bright bell with green holly and red berries.

Verses.

You may write your own greetings on the cards, or you can use these little rhymes, which should be lettered or put on in script:

—1—

The candle light is shining bright
On mistletoe and holly,
And on this card, which says, "I hope
Your Christmas day is jolly."

—2—

I hope the stocking you hang up
Is filled with good things rare,
And that, of every Christmas joy,
You get a lion's share.

—3—

Though every chimney's hid by snow
Piled high upon it, still I know
That somehow Santa will get through
To take my Christmas wish to you—
MERRY CHRISTMAS!

AS SCIENCE SEES IT

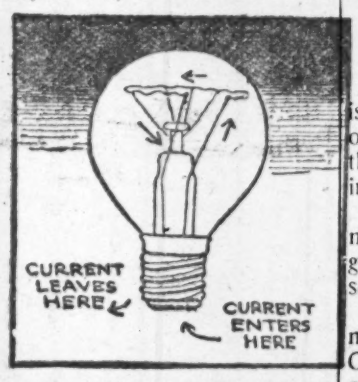

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT.

How does electricity make light? The incandescent light is a familiar sight to you. It is the chief source of illumination in all cities and villages and only in very remote farm houses is it a stranger.

It is apparently a very simple sort of thing. A glass globe in which are located several loops of wire. The current is turned on and we have light. Yet what makes this light?

Whenever an electric current passes through a wire, the wire is heated. In some cases, when the current is very weak, the heat cannot be detected with the hand but it is there just the same. But certain kinds of wire heat up more readily than do others because they offer greater resistance to the passage of the current. Such materials are used in making the wire loops that are enclosed in the glass globes of electric lamps.

When the current is turned on it goes through this loop of wire and heats it to such a temperature that it glows brightly. The heat is so intense, in fact, that the wire would burn as quickly as would powder if it were exposed to the air. For this reason, practically all air is pumped out of the globe during the process of its manufacture.

—4—

And here's a word change to finish up the day's guessing.

Change EAST to WEST in three moves.

POSERS!

1. In what two countries is Mont Blanc?
2. What is the oldest city in Canada?
3. Who wrote "Robinson Crusoe?"
4. What is a quadruped?
5. What drug is found in coffee?
6. What is the meaning of desultory?
7. Who won the 1927 world series, and how many games were played?
8. What is the cube root of 216?

CHRISTMAS IS COMING!

There is a feeling of excitement abroad these days. It is in the air. The shops are filling their windows with all sorts of wonderful things and people are hurrying along the streets, their faces smiling, looking into the shop windows, and buying—buying—buying!

On Christmas morning millions of people are going to be made happy because of this buying going on now. And every gift, strangely enough, will have the ability to make two persons happy—the giver and the receiver.

Of course you are going to get some nice gifts on Christmas, and they will make you happy that day. But you can get Christmas happiness from now until December 25, as well as on that day alone, if you put your mind on the giving instead of the receiving. It's loads of fun to plan clever and pretty little gifts for mother, dad, sister and brother, and it's even more fun to take the money you have made and buy them, or even to make them yourself.

Don't miss this important part of Christmas happiness!

"Why not?"

"A ham can be cured."

The BOYS and GIRLS PAGE

The Ghost at Faversham's

A Story of Mystery and Hidden Treasure

BY W. BOYCE MORGAN

SYNOPSIS.

Because of his father's business failure, Clay Martin, a student at Grayson academy, has not gone home for the Christmas holidays but instead is working at the village postoffice and living at school. As he is leaving the office one night a day or so before Christmas, a special delivery letter comes for Lloyd Faversham, another student who is remaining at the academy. Clay takes the letter to Lloyd, who is a quiet, shy boy and rather a mystery to the other students. Lloyd seems excited at getting the letter, and asks Clay to sit down while he reads it. He then tells Clay that he has a twin sister, Dorothy, and that they are orphans. Their wealthy grandfather recently died, making his secretary, James Fabian, executor of his will and guardian of Lloyd and his sister. Fabian has written Lloyd that he and Dorothy must leave school because their grandfather had left them hardly any money. Lloyd tells Clay that he doesn't like Fabian, and thinks he is trying to rob them.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

INSTALLMENT II.

Clay caught some of Lloyd's excitement as the boy denounced Fabian.

"I think this man Fabian is robbing us!" he said through tight lips, "and believe me he's not going to get away with it."

"It certainly sounds funny," Clay commended. "Isn't there some friend of your grandfather's to whom you could go for help?"

"The old man started as he heard the words."

"Grandfather lived a very secluded life after dad and mother died," returned Lloyd, "and Fabian handled all his affairs. But I know that he was supposed to have a lot of money. It doesn't seem possible that it should have all been spent."

"And you think this man Fabian may be stealing the money himself?" asked Clay.

"Well, it would be easy for him to do it. You see, he's both executor and our guardian. If he knew where grandfather kept his money and securities he could have taken them before the will was put under probate. I don't understand that stuff very well, but when a man dies the court takes charge of his affairs for a year, sees that all bills are paid and all that, and then turns the property over to the heirs. According to grandfather's will, which was read to us after he died, the money was left to us to be handled for us by Fabian until we came of age. Grandfather was funny. He had all his money in bonds and I think he kept most of them in a safe in his house at Kentville. You can see how Fabian might have got them before the officials took the property over."

Clay nodded. Lloyd sat in puzzled thought for a while, passing an anxious hand at intervals over his forehead. Then suddenly he jumped to his feet.

"I just can't believe that this isn't crooked!" he broke out. "And by George, I'm going right up to Kentville and see what I can find out! Nobody is living in the old house, although Dorothy and I can go back there if we want to, and I guess Fabian expects us to, now that he's told us to leave school. But if I go up there without telling him I'm coming I might be able to discover something. At any rate, there's no sense of my staying here."

Clay shifted in his chair. This sounded like adventure! Suddenly the thought of working in the postoffice for the next few days was very distasteful to him.

"I'd almost go with you if I wasn't so hard up!" he confessed.

"Would you, really?" he cried. "Say, Clay, I wish you would. You know, I'm not much good on things like this. I guess I'm sort of backward. But if you would come along I could do anything!"

Clay smiled, but shook his head. "It costs a lot to get to Kentville, and I'm short on money, as you know."

Lloyd dashed to his desk and unlocked a drawer. Taking out a pocketbook, he opened it and counted over a roll of bills.

"I've got almost a hundred dollars here," he said with enthusiasm. "That will take us to Kentville and bring us back. And I'll pay you whatever money you lose by not working."

"No you won't!" replied Clay. He pondered the idea for a moment. The love of adventure finally won. "Tell you what I'll do," he offered. "I'll call Mr. Hale at the postoffice. If he can get somebody to take my place I'll go with you. Guess I've got a couple of days vacation coming to me."

"Great!" cried Lloyd.

Clay hurried to the telephone and got Mr. Hale on the wire. The assistant postmaster said he could easily get another boy to work for a few days.

"That settles it," said Clay. "When do we leave?"

"There's a train from Farquer at 9:10 in the morning—it's too late to get one tonight. That will get us to Kentville, after a couple of changes, late tomorrow afternoon. We can take the 8 o'clock bus to Farquer."

"Then let's pack a few things tonight and do that," agreed Clay. "I'll have to telegraph my folks in the morning."

"And I'll have to telegraph Dot," added Lloyd. "I want her to know what I'm doing. Poor kid, she had a chance to go to a friend's over Christmas, but she insisted on staying at school until we found out about our money."

A few minutes later the boys parted for the night, but it must be confessed that neither slept a great deal. At eight the next morning, after a hastily eaten breakfast, they boarded the bus for Farquer.

During the long journey Clay and Lloyd talked over every angle of their problem, and incidentally, became much faster friends. At five that afternoon they finally alighted from the train at Kentville.

"It's a long way to the house,—we'd better ride," said Lloyd. He hailed a ramshackle cab that had met the train.

"Out to the Faversham place on the lake shore," said Lloyd to the old, bewhiskered driver.

The old man started as he heard the words, and peered at the boys over his glasses.

"You're Lloyd Faversham, ain't you?" he said in a strange voice.

"Yes," replied Lloyd.

"Well," said the old man with a shake of the head, "you can go out there if you've a mind to, but I wouldn't go in there for nothing."

"Why not?" said Lloyd.

"That old place has been haunted ever since your grandfather died," was the reply.

Mounting Animals Is New Type Art

Behind the show cases in a museum where one sees wild animals in a setting resembling their native habitat, are the workshops where they are prepared by experts clever in the art.

To take the skin of a wild animal and mount it upon a foundation which will give the finished object the appearance of life, requires the work of artist, mechanic and zoologist in one. In the first place, the worker must have traveled to the most hidden wilds of the world to observe the animals in their environment. He must know their actions and motions, so that he can show their characteristics.

Stuffing animals is a thing of the past. The skins are now removed and tanned in machines known as "kickers" because they dance on the hide. Then the fur is treated to give it the appearance of life. A taxidermist makes a clay model of the animal such as sculptors use. It must be very perfect in size and measurement. The model is then copied in lighter material, such as layer upon layer of burlap, wire netting, plaster, and papier-mache. The muzzle and nostrils are molded in papier-mache. Glass eyes identical with those of the animal are set in place.

The fur covering is sewed upon the mold with the utmost care so that no one can discern the seams. In the air-tight, chemically treated cases that are safe from moths and insects, one sees the animal among rocks and trees which the artist had also fashioned, and observes the habits of the animal as accurately as if he had gone to the jungle itself.

RIGHT SHE WAS.

Little Edith had been attending kindergarten—greatly improved her vocabulary thereby. On her first holiday, while climbing a ladder, she tumbled off to the ground. Frantically, her fond mother picked her up and asked: "But, darling, how did you fall?"

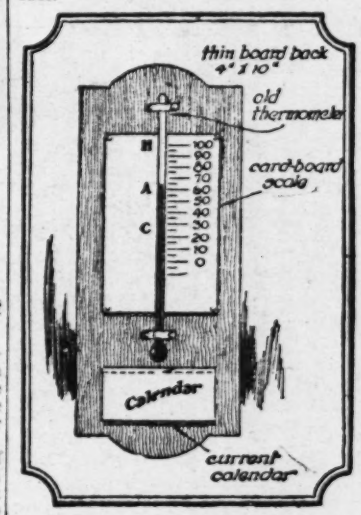

"Vertically," replied Edith.

Something to Do

THERMOMETER CALENDAR.

One unusual and attractive gift which you can make that will be universally appreciated and used is this combination thermometer-calendar. It will require a backboard about 1-4 inch thick, 4 inches wide and 10 inches long, cut to an attractive design.

The thermometer is the tube salvaged from an old thermometer. Just be sure the tube of glass and its contents are still intact. This is held to the board by means of two light tin strips, but before fastening it solidly, mount the cardboard behind it and subject the thermometer to temperatures ranging from very low up to as high as possible. With this information at hand, mark the card with the point at which the top of the liquid stands every 10, 20, 30, etc., degrees. Then remove the card, carefully letter this callibration in place and then make both card and tube fast.

The calendar is fastened to the lower part of the back with glue. An attractive finish for the wood will be a suitable stain if the wood is of oak, walnut or maple. If it is of soft wood, you can use one of the present popular lacquer colors. It can be beautified, too, with a trim of the same lacquer but in contrasting colors.

INSTALLMENT PLAN.

Chapter 57—The Gauls Invade Rome, 390 B. C. By J. CARROLL MANSFIELD

IN 390 B.C. ITALY WAS INVADED BY A HORDE OF WARLIKE BARBARIANS THAT LIVED IN GAUL, NORTH OF THE APPENINE MOUNTAINS. THE GAULS OVER-RAN ETRURIA, DEFEATED A ROMAN ARMY SENT AGAINST THEM, AND ADVANCED TO THE GATES OF ROME ITSELF. A BAND OF ROMAN SOLDIERS WITH THEIR FAMILIES SHUT THEMSELVES UP IN THE TEMPLE-FORTRESS ON THE CAPITOLINE HILL WHILE THE REMAINDER OF THE INHABITANTS FLED HASTILY INTO THE SURROUNDING COUNTRY. —•

A NUMBER OF HEROIC MEMBERS OF THE SENATE CHOSE TO REMAIN BEHIND IN THE DESERTED CITY, HOPING THAT BY THE SACRIFICE OF THEIR LIVES THE BARBARIANS WOULD SPARE THE REST OF THE POPULACE. WHEN THE GAULS ENTERED ROME THEY WERE SURPRISED TO SEE THESE OLD MEN SITTING SILENTLY IN THE FORUM. —•

ONE OF THE BARBARIANS, THINKING, PERHAPS, THAT THE MOTIONLESS FIGURES WERE STATUES, ROUGHLY STROKED THE BEARD OF ONE OF THE SENATORS. THE ROMAN TOOK THIS AS AN INSULT AND STRUCK THE GAUL ON THE HEAD WITH HIS IVORY STAFF.

ANGERED BY THE BLOW, THE GAUL KILLED THE OLD SENATOR. THEN BEGAN A CRUEL MASSACRE OF THE HELPLESS LAWMAKERS. THE BARBARIANS STREAMED THROUGH THE CITY PILLAGING AND BURNING, WHILE FROM THE FORTRESS ON THE HILL THE ROMANS WATCHED WITH DISMAY THE DESTRUCTION OF THEIR HOMES.

ALL THE RECORDS OF EARLY ROME ARE SAID TO HAVE BEEN DESTROYED IN THE CONFLAGRATION.- AFTER BURNING THE CITY, THE GAULS LAID SIEGE TO THE CAPITOLINE HILL. THEY TRIED TO TAKE THE FORTRESS BY STORM BUT WERE UNABLE TO SCALE THE STEEP SIDES OF THE HILL. —•

THE ROMANS WERE SOON THREATENED WITH FAMINE, BUT TO MAKE THE ENEMY BELIEVE THAT THEY WERE WELL SUPPLIED WITH FOOD, THE HUNGRY DEFENDERS NOW AND THEN THREW LOAVES OF BREAD DOWN UPON THE BARBARIANS. ———— •

AT LAST THE GAULS DISCOVERED A WAY TO ASCEND THE ROCKY CLIFF AND ONE NIGHT THEY STARTED STEALTHILY CLIMBING UP TO SURPRISE THE DEFENDERS. THE ROMANS, FATIGUED BY THE SIEGE AND THINKING THEMSELVES SAFE, WERE FAST ASLEEP.

AS THE GAULS NEARED THE TOP OF THE HILL, THE FAINT CLANK OF THEIR ARMOR ALARMED THE SACRED GEESE KEPT IN THE TEMPLE AND THEY BEGAN CACKLING LOUDLY. AROUSED BY THE NOISE, THE GARRISON, LED BY MARCUS MANLIUS, MANNED THE PARAPET IN TIME TO REPULSE THE ASSAULT. —•

FINALLY BRENNUS, THE GALLIC KING, OFFERED TO LEAVE ROME IF THE ROMANS WOULD PAY HIM A THOUSAND POUNDS OF GOLD. THE ROMANS AGREED, THE GOLD WAS COLLECTED AND SCALES WERE SET UP. AS THE ROMANS WERE WEIGHING THE GOLD THEY OBSERVED THAT

THE BARBARIANS WERE CHEATING THEM BY USING FALSE WEIGHTS. WHEN QUINTUS SULPICIUS, THE ROMAN MILITARY TRIBUNE PROTESTED AGAINST THIS FRAUD, BRENNUS INSOLENTLY FLUNG HIS SWORD ON THE SCALES, EXCLAIMING, "WOE TO THE VANQUISHED!" ———— •

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate

BEFORE THE GOLD WAS GIVEN TO THE GAULS, A ROMAN ARMY THAT HAD BEEN GATHERED OUTSIDE THE CITY BY CAMILLUS, A BRAVE GENERAL, APPEARED ON THE SCENE. DECLARING THAT ROME WOULD BE RANSOMED NOT WITH GOLD BUT BY THE SWORD, CAMILLUS ATTACKED THE INVADERS.

DEFEATED BY CAMILLUS, THE GAULS TURNED THEIR BACKS ON ROME. THEIR RETREAT WAS HASTENED BY THE NEWS THAT IN THEIR ABSENSE THE VENETI, ANOTHER BARBARIAN TRIBE, HAD INVADED GAUL. AS SOON AS THE GAULS HAD GONE, THE ROMANS BRAVELY SET TO WORK REBUILDING THEIR BURNED CITY. —•

A BIRTHDAY—is it? or an anniversary that you wish to remember in a pleasant way? or just a "surprise" in token that you have been thinking of someone?

Hollingsworth's candy always appeals to those who love fine things. My Hobby Box is a general favorite, for you find in it but few creams, for most of these pieces have nut, fruit and other unusual centers. . . . Have you ever tasted the Hollingsworth "floating fruits," the pineapple, peach, strawberry and cherry? Fresh fruit is sealed in a rich coating of chocolate. . . . Another unusual candy, much prized by those with a fondness for cocoanut, is the hand-rolled cocoanut fondant, in chocolate.

Hollingsworth makes a variety of different packages and assortments, and the candy in My Hobby Box is a selection from all of these. Ask for it at the better drug stores. In one, two, three and five pound packages at $1.50 the pound. Virgil Hollingsworth, Augusta, Georgia.

Why Be Sluggish at ANY Age?

Age need not bring on sluggishness — and won't, if you give the system a tiny bit of calcium now and then. Calcium cleanses the system as no cathartic can, with none of the after-effects that make salts so injurious.

A five day test of calcium wafers will prove very conclusively the system's need for calcium, and the benefit from these little wafers. Druggists have a handy, pocket box at 10c (sufficient for the test) or family size at 60c.

Free!

If your druggist hasn't the ten-cent tin for five-day test in stock, a box will be sent you complimentary and postpaid; just address the Stuart Co., Dep't C577 Marshall, Mich.

HOW THE MERMAID LEGEND GOT ITS START—It is believed to have emminated from the striking similarity of these manatees to the fabled sirens of mythology. These two specimens of the rare creature were capturd near the port of Aden, Arabia. Though the British museum has offered large sums for them, their owners have them on display at six pence per onlooker. (Underwood)

MASSACHUSETTS EXECUTIVE AND GIRL BRIDE—Lieutenant Governor Frank G. Allen, 53 years old, and the former Miss Eleanor H. Wallace, of Pittsburgh. Mrs. Allen is 27, a graduate of Wellesley two years ago and a classmate of her husband's daughter, Mary Allen. (International)

SOUTHERN ROMANCE ENDS IN NORTHERN MARRIAGE — Miss Betty Kress, born in Atlanta, and Daniel E. Huger, son of an old Charleston, S. C., family, leaving a New York church after their recent wedding, a brilliant society event. (International)

TURKISH ENVOY HEAVILY GUARDED—Moukhtar Bey, new Turkish ambassador to the United States, as he landed at New York with a heavy guard of police. He is accused of being responsible for the massacre of 30,000 Armenian Christians in 1920. (International)

MORE "COMPANIONS" — Joseph L. Jones and his bride, of Chicago, who were wedded under the "companionate union" vows of fidelity "till death or the inclination of either of us do us part." (International)

KING OF THE CANNIBAL ISLE — Alain Gerbault, famous tennis player and globe-trotter, put into the Island of Rodriquez in the Indian ocean, and the Polynesian natives elected him their king. (International)

SUEDE WOOL FOR THE AVENUE A nobby tailored winter coat of suede wool trimmed with luxurious shawl collar and cuffs of mandel. The design is American. (Herbert)

UNCA WALT, I WANT TO GIVE SANTY CLAUS A CHRISTMAS PRESENT. DID ANYBODY EVER GIVE HIM ONE?

I DON'T THINK ANYBODY EVER DID. AND IT'S A GOOD IDEA — IF YOU CAN GET IT TO HIM IN TIME.

I CAN GET IT TO HIM ALL RIGHT. I'VE GOT IT ALL WRAPPED UP WITH A TAG ON IT.

AND I'VE GOT IT ALL TUCKED AWAY BEHIND. I BETCHA HE'LL LIKE IT.

OO! I DIDN'T QUITE CLEAR THE TELEPHONE WIRES.

WOW! THAT WAS A NARROW ESCAPE. I WENT INTO A NOSE DIVE AND ALMOST CRASHED.

IT'S A GOOD THING IT HAS A SHORT WHEELBASE. IT'S EASY TO TURN, AN' I CAN PARK ON A BATHMAT.

I GUESS I'D BETTER CLIMB UP HIGHER. I DON'T WANT TO BEND ANY CHURCH STEEPLES.

NOW I'M IN A SNOW STORM AN IT'S SO THICK I CAN'T SEE TEN FEET AHEAD.

WOULD YOU LOOK AT THIS! I FORGOT ALL ABOUT THE MOUNTAINS UP THIS WAY.

IT'S LUCKY I FOUND YOU. I FELL OUT O' THE SKY OVER HERE AN' I'M TAKIN' A PRESENT TO SANTY CLAUS AN' WANT TO GET WARM.

COME IN HERE THIS MINUTE. IT IS BITTER COLD. I HAVE A FINE LOG FIRE BURNING.

YES, SONNY, YOU'RE WELCOME TO GET WARM BUT I CAN'T GIVE YOU A THING TO EAT. I ATE THE LAST CRUMB LAST NIGHT.

OH, THEN I'LL GIVE YOU SOME OF THE PRESENT I HAVE FOR SANTY CLAUS. I DON'T THINK HE'LL MIND DO YOU?

IT'S A CAKE AN' SOME COOKIES AN' THINGS. YOU EAT 'EM. I HAD A GOOD BREAKFAST.

THAT'S WONDERFUL AND I'M SURE SANTA WOULD DIVIDE WITH US IF HE WERE HERE.

THE STORY OF SKEEZIX AND THE GIFT HE IS TAKING TO SANTA CLAUS CONTINUED A WEEK FROM TODAY.

AN OLD STORY WITH A NEW FINISH. BY LINK

THAT'S WHAT I CALL QUICK WORK.

THAT'S NOTHIN'! A GUY FELL OFF A SKY SCRAPER ROOF —

TOOK OUT AN ACCIDENT POLICY AS HE PASSED THE TWENTIETH FLOOR,- WAS HANDED HIS CLAIM

AS HE PASSED THE EIGHTEENTH,— A TAILOR MEASURED HIM FOR A NEW SUIT AS HE WHIZZED BY THE SIXTEENTH —

HE SLIPPED INTO THE SUIT AS HE GLIDED PAST THE THIRTEENTH,- BOUGHT A HAT, SHOES, TIE AND CIGARS BEFORE HE PASSED THE SECOND FLOOR —

- WHERE HE BORROWED A PARACHUTE AND LANDED UNHURT ON THE SIDEWALK SEVENTY BUCKS TO THE GOOD.

GOSH!

I'LL GET HIM A BIG RED AUTOMOBILE AND A BRAN' NEW SLED AND AN ELECTRIC TRAIN SET AND A FINE NEW FOOTBALL AND SKATES AND MARBLES AND A SAIL BOAT AND A BASE-BALL OUTFIT AND A KIT OF TOOLS —

AND ALL THE CAKE AND CANDY HE CAN EAT!! THERE IS ONLY ONE CONDITION — AND THAT IS — HE MUST BE A GOOD BOY AND DESERVE IT!!

THAT SETTLES IT!! AFTER WHAT POP JUST SAID — NO TRICKS FOR MINE! I'LL PUT THIS MONKEY-WRENCH RIGHT BACK!

I'LL SHOW 'EM I CAN BE A GOOD BOY! I'LL WASH MY FACE AN' NECK AN' EVEN BEHIND MY EARS!!

AN' I'LL COMB MY HAIR NICE AN' SLICK!

AN' BRUSH MY SUIT AN' TIE MY BOW TIE NICE AND STRAIGHT —

AN' NOW I'LL JUST WALK IN AN' SEE IF MY DEAR MOTHER OR FATHER WANTS ME TO RUN ERRANDS OR DO ANY LIL' THING I CAN FOR 'EM!!!

MR. JONES PROMISED THE STRANGER THAT HIS LITTLE BOY ELMER WOULD TRY AND DESERVE THE GIFTS! THE STRANGER JUMPED INTO HIS SLEIGH AND DISAPPEARED IN THE CLOUDS! THEN MR. JONES REALIZED HE HAD BEEN TALKING TO SANTA CLAUS!

WHAT A LOVELY STORY! I WISH PERRY WAS HERE TO HEAR IT!!!

BRANNER.

HE'S A JOHN! — ONE REEL — BY INK

EVERY WIFE WORKS HARD, — I THOUGHT IT WOULD MAKE THINGS EASIER FOR MINE IF I BOUGHT A FLIVVER —

SO I BOUGHT ONE AND TAKE HER OUT RIDING EACH EVENING —

BET IT'S MADE IT EASIER FOR HER.

OH YES! IT'S MADE IT MUCH EASIER FOR HER, — SOON AS WE FINISH EATING OUR SUPPER SHE SAYS — "JOHN, YOU WASH THE DISHES WHILE I GET DRESSED TO GO DRIVING!"

HAW-HAW — FOOL HER, — SUGGEST DOING 'EM WHEN YOU RETURN.

I DID, — AND WHEN WE GOT HOME SHE SAID "JOHN, YOU DO THE DISHES WHILE I PUT THE BABY TO BED!"
